Résumé	Le processus de reconnaissance du statut de réfugié au sens de la Convention de Genève, tel qu'il est énoncé dans la Loi sur l'immigration, sert à déterminer si les personnes qui revendiquent ce statut y ont effectivement droit et peuvent bénéficier de la protection accordée aux réfugiés au sens de la Convention. Ce processus s'est avéré inadéquat, tant au point de vue juridique que pratique. Dans ce bulletin, on examine les mécanismes en vigueur actuellement et le projet de réforme contenu dans la loi C-55 déposé en mai 1987.

Introduction

The Canadian Research Index - Microlog puts all of Canada's hard-to-find government and research literature at your fingertips. Canadian Research Index in print is a monthly indexing and abstracting service. An electronic version on CD-ROM or via the Internet is also available. Microlog represents our fulltext document service. Most titles included in Canadian Research Index are available in paper as well as microfiche format. Together, these services are a powerful tool for finding Canadian report publications.

The Canadian Research Index includes scientific and technical research papers in physical, natural and social sciences. It also includes policy papers, important statistical publications, and annual reports.

Documents issued in English or French are catalogued, indexed and abstracted in the language of the publication, while bilingual documents are catalogued, indexed and abstracted in both languages.

Every effort is made to ensure the currency of the index. For instance, documents appearing in the checklist of Canadian Government Publications are delivered by the Microlog Service approximately two months after publication of the list.

SOURCES

- government publications from the federal, provincial and municipal levels
- depository publications of reference value
- non-depository publications issued by government organizations, laboratories and research centres
- non-profit organizations, educational institutions and research groups
- some monographs and serials issued by Statistics Canada

ORGANIZATION

Canadian Research Index comprises the following sections:

Titles and abstracts: A full bibliographic citation and a descriptive abstract for each title.

Corporate name index: Access by controlled format corporate names based on Canadiana Authorities.

Personal name index: Access by personal name.

Subject index: Subject terms based on Library of Congress and Canadian Subject Headings are assigned to each document. A cross-referencing structure assists searchers.

Series titles: Lists by title and numbers all reports in a series; series are available as an on-going subscription or retrospective collection.

Microfiche collections: Lists contents of each fiche collection for quick reference. These collections can be used as current awareness lists in broad subject areas to notify users of new acquisitions.

ELECTRONIC ACCESS

The full Canadian Research Index file from 1982 to date is available in electronic formats on the SilverPlatter SPIRS platform. It is accessible on CD; it may be licensed for network use on a local server or on a SilverPlatter ERL server; and it is available for Internet subscription. Reports may be ordered through the National Technical Information Service in the U.S.A., or directly through Micromedia's Technical Information Centre. All catalogued documents issued by Statistics Canada are now included in electronic versions of Canadian Research Index. For information, contact Micromedia's CD Centre at 1-800-387-2689.

DOCUMENT DELIVERY

The unique Microlog Accession Number is the key to immediate retrieval of any document. Most documents cited in Canadian Research Index are available as part of the Microlog Microfiche Subscription Service, institutions may subscribe to complete or partial collections of the documents in the Index. Individual copies on microfiche or paper reprints may be ordered through Micromedia's Document Delivery Service. To order, please contact:

Introduction

Microlog : Index de recherche du Canada met à votre disposition toutes les publications du gouvernement et les travaux de recherche difficiles à se procurer. L'Index de recherche du Canada imprimé est un service mensuel d'indexation et de résumés. Une version électronique est également offerte sur CD-ROM ou dans Internet. Microlog représente notre service de documents en texte intégral. La plupart des titres figurant dans l'Index sont disponibles sous forme imprimée et sur microfiche. Ces services combinés constituent un outil très efficace pour retrouver les publications des différents gouvernements du Canada.

L'Index contient entre autres des recherches en sciences physiques, naturelles et sociales, des énoncés de politique, des statistiques et des rapports annuels.

Les ouvrages publiés en français ou en anglais sont indexés et résumés dans la langue de publication; les ouvrages bilingues sont traités dans les deux langues.

SOURCES

- publications fédérales, provinciales et municipales
- publications déposées servant de référence
- publications non déposées publiées par les organismes gouvernementaux, les laboratoires et les centres de recherche
- publications d'organismes à but non lucratif, d'établissements d'enseignement et de groupes de recherche
- certaines monographies et publication en série publiées par Statistique Canada

ORGANISATION DE L'INDEX

Titres et résumés: tous les titres sont catalogués et accompagnés d'un résumé descriptif.

Index des dénominations sociales: donne un accès par dénominations sociales fondées sur les vedettes d'autorité du service Canadiana.

Index des noms: donne un accès par auteur.

Index des matières: des descripteurs fondés sur les vedettes matières des documents Library of Congress

Subject Headings et Canadian Subject Headings sont associés à chaque publication; un réseau de renvois facilite la recherche.

Titres de collections: tous les rapports publiés en série sont classés par titre et numéro. Ces documents sont disponibles par le biais d'un abonnement permanent et ils sont aussi intégrés à une collection rétrospective.

Collections de microfiches: chaque collection apparaît dans une section séparée pour faciliter la recherche. Ces listes peuvent aussi servir à renseigner les usagers sur les nouveautés.

ACCÈS ÉLECTRONIQUE

Le fichier complet de l'Index de recherche du Canada, de 1982 à aujourd'hui, est disponible sous forme électronique à partir de la plate-forme SilverPlatter SPIRS. Il est offert sur CD-ROM et il est possible d'obtenir des licences d'utilisation en réseau pour un serveur local ou pour un serveur SilverPlatter ERL. Il est également disponible par le biais d'un abonnement Internet. Les rapports peuvent être commandés par l'intermédiaire du National Technical Information Service aux États-Unis ou encore directement au Centre d'information technique de Micromedia. Tous les documents catalogués publiés par Statistique Canada sont intégrés dans les versions électroniques de l'Index de recherche du Canada. Pour plus de détails, contactez le personnel de Micromedia au 1 800 387-2689.

LIVRAISON DE DOCUMENTS

Le numéro d'accès unique de Microlog est la clé qui permet de repérer immédiatement tout document. La majorité des documents cités dans l'Index de recherche du Canada sont offerts par le service d'abonnement aux microfiches de Microlog. Les organismes peuvent s'abonner à l'ensemble ou à certaines des collections de documents de l'Index. On peut également commander des reproductions de documents sur microfiches ou sur papier par l'intermédiaire du service de livraison de documents de Micromedia. Pour commander, communiquer avec:

Sample CRI Search

"How can a person from a foreign country qualify for refugee status in Canada?"

The researcher can search in CRI as in any library catalogue - by subject, author and title.
Because the index is bilingual, searching can be done in English or in French.

Recherche type avec IRC

"Comment une personne d'un pays étranger peut-elle demander le statut de réfugié au Canada?"

La méthode de recherche dans IRC est la même que dans une bibliothèque, puisque les documents sont indexés par auteur, par sujet et par titre. L'index étant bilingue, la consultation peut se faire en français ou en anglais.

STEP 2/DEUXIÈME ÉTAPE

A unified search strategy

The search strategy should include all the monthly issues. Start with the most recent issue and work back. Monthly issues are cumulated annually.

Établir une stratégie de recherche unifiée

La stratégie de recherche doit tenir compte de toutes les publications mensuelles, à commencer par les plus récentes. Chaque année, ces publications font l'objet d'une refonte.

STEP 3/TROISIÈME ÉTAPE

Retrieve the publication

Each bibliographic citation gives a full description of the relevant document. Locate the document by the microfiche number in the library's collection or order from Micromedia. Individual publications are available for purchase on microfiche or paper. The bibliographic description provides publisher source information.

Repérer la publication

Chaque notice bibliographique comprend une description complète du document; celui-ci peut être repéré grâce au numéro de microfiche de la bibliothèque; sinon, il faut le commander à Micromedia. On peut se procurer les monographies sur microfiches ou sur papier. La description bibliographique comporte également des indications sur l'éditeur.

The 1983 controlled deer hunt in Wildlife Management Unit 93

By Richard Battson. Chatham, ON : Ministry of Natural Resources, 1984. ii, 38 p. : Maps
MICROLOG 97-00399 (1 fiche)

A controlled deer hunt was held in Wildlife Management Unit 93. Provides results of the hunt, biological data, comments from mandatory reports, enforcement activities, the distribution of the deer harvest, and economic benefits of the hunt. A discussion on recreation, the stability of the deer population, and the condition of deer is included, along with conclusions.

The 1983 controlled deer hunt in Wildlife Management Units 90A and 90B

By David A. Reid. Simcoe, ON : Ministry of Natural Resources, Southwestern Region, 1984. 69 p. : Ill., Bibl.
MICROLOG 97-00309 (1 fiche)

The hunting season, in which shotguns and muzzleloaders were the only weapons permitted and hunter numbers were controlled, occurred in the Simcoe District wildlife management units 90A and 90B. This report summarizes the result of the hunt and comparisons are made with hunts from the last 3 years. Includes methods used to obtain the hunt results. Results are divided into the following: applications, participation, enforcement, effort, deer seen, hunter success, harvest, weapons, mandatory reports, and biological data of the deer (age, sex, weight, antlers, evidence of lactation). A discussion of the results is also included.

By S.J. Kerr. Owen Sound, ON : Ministry of Natural Resources, Owen Sound District, 1985. iv, 25 p. : Bibl.
MICROLOG 97-00310 (1 fiche)

Presents results of a survey that interviewed 200 small game hunters and 572 waterfowl hunters during the 1984-85 hunting season in the Owen Sound district of Ontario. Results presented include the small game and waterfowl harvests by species, hunting effort and success, number of hunters seeking species, and hunting pressure estimates. The appendix includes a sampling schedule used in the survey.

By S.J. Kerr. Owen Sound, ON : Ministry of Natural Resources, Owen Sound Administrative District, 1984. iv, 43 p. : Maps, Bibl.
MICROLOG 97-00400 (2 fiche)

Reports on eight upwelling incubation box projects carried out by local sportsmen's organisations in the Owen Sound region under the Community Fisheries Involvement Program during winter and spring 1983-84. Species whose eggs were reared in the boxes included brown trout and rainbow trout. Operational details of the projects are summarised, juvenile salmonid population assessment data are presented for planted streams, and a comparison with other projects carried out in southwestern Ontario is made.

MICROLOG 97-00280 (1 fiche)

Presents results of a roving creel survey conducted on Pigeon Lake and Bald Lakes from May to September 1985. Data collected included angling effort, catch, species caught and preferred, fish biometric data, yield per hectare by species, angling method preferences, angler type and origin, and fishing infractions. Results are tabulated or shown as graphs. Species fished include walleye, muskellunge, bass, and yellow perch. An appendix includes an evaluation of fastwater sanctuaries and the reduced angling season on the Kawartha Lakes.

Presents results of a project that collected biological information on the Lake Scugog muskellunge stock in Osler Marsh. Investigators set nets to capture muskellunge moving from the lake into the marsh during the spawning run in 1986-87, and counted, examined, weighed, and measured the captured fish daily. Each muskellunge was also tagged and selected female fish were fitted with radio transmitters. Results presented include numbers caught, length distribution, age frequency distribution, and length and age distributions by sex of fish.

By Charlene Skinkle. Sault Ste. Marie, ON : Ministry of Natural Resources, Algoma Fisheries Assessment Unit, 1990. v, 20 p. : Ill., Bibl.
MICROLOG 97-00288 (1 fiche)

Presents results of a single access point creel survey conducted on Elliot Lake from May to September 1986. The main objectives of the survey were to estimate the spring and summer angling effort, harvest, and catch per unit effort; to monitor the age, length, and weight composition of lake trout and smallmouth bass; and to obtain information on the diet of the lake trout. Details on angler origin, fishing methods, and species preferences were also collected. Results are presented in tables and graphs, with accompanying discussion.

An Agri-tourism strategy for Nova Scotia

KPMG. Truro, NS : Agriculture & Marketing, Marketing Services Branch, 1996. 141 p. : ill.
MICROLOG 97-00438 (2 fiche)

Nova Scotia has an under-utilised and underdeveloped tourism asset in its agricultural sector. This study was designed to explore this resource to provide an understanding of the current standing of agriculture-based tourism at the local, national, and international level and to make recommendations for fostering the development of agri-tourism initiatives in the province. The study begins with a definition of agri-tourism and a review of the current situation of agri-tourism in Nova Scotia. It also highlights agri-tourism initiatives in other provinces and countries, outlining key factors involved in the success of those initiatives. Five case studies are included which describe successful agri-tourism operations in Massachusetts, Ontario, Ireland, Prince Edward Island, and Australia. Recommendations for future development of Nova Scotia agri-tourism and a strategy for agri-tourism development conclude the study.

This book is designed to provide a broad examination of the issue of constitutional amendment in Canada, with a focus on the law and process of constitutional change. The examination begins with a consideration of the competing pulls of protection and flexibility that determine ultimately how states provide for the amendment of their constitutions. This is followed by a review of how Canada's constitution was amended from July 1, 1867 to the time of patriation on April 17, 1982. A detailed examination of the seven procedures comprising the current amending formula is provided, and the complexity of the issue of constitutional amendment is illustrated by reviewing what might be the appropriate procedure for various aspects of Senate reform. Two chapters touch upon whether it is easy to amend Canada's constitution under the 1982 amending formula, one examining four amendments achieved since patriation and the other examining the unsuccessful attempts at amendment over the same period. Finally, the processes and laws that supplement the amending formula are reviewed and some tentative conclusions are offered.

L'étude a pour objectif de permettre à l'industrie canadienne des produits forestiers de se comparer à des rivales, en présentant des stratégies pointues axées sur la clientèle. Il est évident que la totalité des stratégies dont il est question dans ce rapport ne pourra être mise en application par toutes les entreprises du secteur. Cependant, on nombre des idées présentées pourraient aider les sociétés intéressées à analyser et à élaborer de telles stratégies. Ce rapport examine différentes stratégies axées sur la clientèle : six dans le secteur des produits forestiers, et une dans le secteur de l'automobile. Les stratégies étudiées sont considérées comme faisant partie de ce qui se fait de mieux dans ce domaine au sein de l'industrie. On se penche sur la stratégie d'une entreprise d'un autre secteur que celui des produits forestiers, à des fins de mise en contraste. Pour trouver les entreprises à étudier, on s'est fondé sur les recommandations formulées par des clients, des pairs et d'autres experts de l'industrie.

Anodic dissolution of UO<sub>2</sub> in slightly alkaline sodium perchlorate solutions

By S. Sunder, D.W. Shoesmith and L.K. Strandlund. Pinawa, MB : Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, Whiteshell Laboratories, 1996. 29 p. : Ill., Bibl. (AECL research / Atomic Energy of Canada Ltd. ; AECL-11440 ISSN 0067-0367) ISBN 0-660-16454-X CCG-P no. CC2-11440E MICROLOG 97-00193 (1 fiche)

Spent nuclear fuel is mainly uranium dioxide (UO<sub>2</sub>). Assessment of the geological disposal of such fuel requires a prediction of the dissolution rate as a function of disposal time. This rate is expected to be a function of redox conditions, since UO<sub>2</sub> is a solid for which the solubility increases by many orders of magnitude under oxidising conditions. Redox conditions within a Canadian nuclear waste disposal vault will initially be oxidising. This report describes a study of anodic dissolution of uranium dioxide (UO<sub>2</sub>) in solutions of an oxidising agent (sodium perchlorate) at pH of about 9.5. The study used electrochemical methods, and results are presented as logarithmic current-time plots. Results are discussed in terms of surface chemistry of UO<sub>2</sub> and for each of two distinct regions of anodic oxidation and dissolution behaviour observed.

L'Appauvrissement des familles dans un contexte d'insécurité : réflexions familiales dans le cadre de la tenue du deuxième Sommet socio-économique

Québec : Gouvernement du Québec, Conseil de la famille, 1996. 19 p. : Bibl. ISBN 2-550-30751-8 MICROLOG 97-00499 (1 fiche)

Dans ce document, le Conseil de la famille livre quelques-unes de ses réflexions sur certains des thèmes bien précis afin de sensibiliser la population et les décideurs à l'impact des décisions que le gouvernement pourrait prendre à la suite du deuxième Sommet socio-économique, sur le développement et le bien-être des familles, en particulier sur celui des familles à faibles revenus et les familles avec de jeunes enfants. Dans un premier temps, le Conseil décrit la situation de pauvreté des familles aggravée par les compressions à l'aide sociale déjà entreprises par le gouvernement ainsi que les effets de la pauvreté sur les familles. Ensuite, il examine l'impact du projet d'une prestation unifiée pour enfants sur les familles. Enfin, il fait ressortir combien il est essentiel de tenir compte de la variable familiale lorsque l'on désire intégrer les familles au marché du travail et que l'on parle de développer l'économie sociale.

Ce document présente les résultats de la modélisation des principaux comportements des contrôleurs du Centre de coordination des opérations de recherche et sauvetage de Trenton. Deux modèles ont été élaborés afin de rendre compte des mécanismes de raisonnement du contrôleur aérien et du contrôleur maritime. La modélisation se base sur le modèle d'agent MAREA (Modèle d'agent réfléchissant sur des états à atteindre). Elle a porté essentiellement sur la représentation de l'espace de buts, sur la spécification des principaux plans stéréotypés et des actions élémentaires. De plus, nous avons suggéré une démarche qui pourrait être utilisée pour modéliser d'autres domaines d'application.

Arctic tanker structural requirement evaluation : final report

Canarctic Shipping Company Ltd. Montreal : Transport Canada, Policy & Coordination, Transportation Development Centre, 1995. xvi, 377 p. : Ill., Bibl. MICROLOG 97-00396 (5 fiche)

Arctic class tankers have much heavier structures than their open-water counterparts, and the high capital cost of such structures results in high freight rates. This study investigates the use of higher strength steels for construction of such ships and optimises their structural configuration in terms of criteria such as weight, materials, and shipbuilding costs. The investigation included a questionnaire survey of shipyards and extensive interviews with marine classification societies and eight shipyards. The production, availability, and properties of higher strength steels are examined in depth. Outline arrangements and construction drawings are presented for double skin tankers of 50,000 to 150,000 dead-weight tonnes, along with drawings of the repair of a high strength steel structure with mild steel. Finite element analysis is used to verify the structures. Recommendations are made on regulations, the use of high strength steels, cargo and ballast tank arrangements, construction details, and access to ballast spaces.

Lors d'un projet sur les poulaillons de la rivière Sainte-Anne, les analyses ont révélé de fortes teneurs en arsenic dans la chair de certains individus. De plus, les teneurs en arsenic dans le fleuve Saint-Laurent (données du réseau de suivi du Ministère) sont relativement élevées si l'on considère les critères de qualité du MENVIQ. Enfin, l'arsenic a été jugé contaminant prioritaire par Environnement Canada. Il paraît donc important de connaître la dynamique de l'arsenic dans l'écosystème aquatique et particulièrement dans celui du Saint-Laurent. Presents results of a study undertaken to assess whether the administrative data routinely collected by Manitoba Health could be used to monitor the quality of care in the province's personal care homes. The outcome indicators chosen for the study were mortality rates and the rates of the following diagnoses: bed sores, urinary tract infections, influenza, pneumonia, anaemia, dehydration, and gangrene. The study used four years of data from 1987 to 1991, and examined variations across the eight regions of the province and across three types of personal care homes (non-proprietary juxtaposed to a hospital, non-proprietary but free-standing, and proprietary) while taking account of the characteristics of residents (age, gender, and level of dependency).

Trends in forest management are changing such that foresters are being asked to predict not only stemwood volume but also variables related to biodiversity, wildlife habitat, and other non-timber values. In response to these trends, the permanent sample plot (PSP) system for the Southern (Ontario) Region Growth and Yield Program has incorporated measurements specific to wildlife habitat classification and forest dynamics. This report evaluates the methodologies currently employed in the PSP establishment program and discusses the potential use of each wildlife data element collected for providing valuable and useable wildlife habitat information. The methodologies evaluated include dead tree tally/mensuration, nesting/feeding cavity tally, forage and browse estimates, and growth plot tree tally. For each technique described, scientific and practical validity is assessed, recommendations for improvement are made, the potential wildlife information gained is outlined, and possible analysis techniques to be used on the collected data are noted.

The STAR (STability ARray) procedure is frequently used to classify atmospheric stability from routine meteorological data. This report evaluates the performance of the procedure at four nuclear facilities across eastern and central Canada by comparing the STAR-derived classes from those predicted by the standard deviation in wind direction. The report also examines whether any improvement in performance is achieved by modifying the procedure to take account of snow by comparing winter sensible heat fluxes over snow-free and snow-covered ground. Further modifications were made empirically by using the standard deviation data to determine the most likely stability class for each combination of insolation and wind speed considered in the STAR procedure. The revised method was then evaluated. In addition, the present method for deducing stability class from vertical temperature gradient was assessed.

Describes a technique which can be used to automatically classify Arctic ambient noise data collected using an array of hydrophones suspended below the ice. This technique is currently designed for analysing low frequency (5-60 Hertz) noise collected from the central Arctic pack ice. It is capable of distinguishing between nearby or distant active pressure-riding events, thermal ice-cracking events, biological noise, cable strum, flow noise, and microseisms. Different noise types are distinguished by the power spectra, cross spectral matrices, and noise directivity of the received sound. The technique is designed as a real time system which can automatically classify the dominant noise contained in the data over a specified time interval. This technique is applied to data obtained in the Lincoln Sea over five days in April 1988. Application of the algorithms produced a quantitative classification of the noise type.

Avoiding the pitfalls : can regime-switching tests detect bubbles?

Work on testing for rational speculative bubbles in financial markets has prompted much debate, much of which has focused on methodology. Monte Carlo simulations reported in Evans (1991) showed that standard tests for unit roots and co-integration frequently reject the presence of bubbles even when such bubbles are present by construction. Evans referred to this problem as the pitfall of testing for bubbles. Since Evans, new tests for rational speculative bubbles that rely on regime switching have been proposed. This paper reports on Monte Carlo experiments using Evans's data generating process to gauge the performance of two kinds of regime switching tests. The experiments rely heavily on certain new, fast, and robust programs developed for the estimation of switching regression models that make Monte Carlo studies of such estimators practical. The paper shows whether regime switching tests have power to detect periodically collapsing bubbles, and compares and contrasts the performance of the two different regime switching tests.

Concerns over changes in the Banff/Bow Valley ecosystem and threats to the ecosystem integrity led to establishment of the Banff/Bow Valley Study, whose findings are reported in this document. The Study had three major objectives: to develop a vision and goals for Banff/Bow Valley that will integrate ecological, social, and economic values; to complete a comprehensive analysis of existing information and to provide direction for future data collection and analysis; and to provide direction on the management of human use and development in a manner that will maintain ecological values and provide sustainable tourism. The document introduces the context of the Study, presents goals and a vision for the Bow Valley in Banff National Park, and notes trends affecting the area. It then reviews issues affecting the area and recommends actions to maintain ecological integrity, manage human use, and deal with other concerns such as those related to transportation infrastructure and cultural sites. The need for regional planning and management is also noted. The document concludes with a discussion of future directions for the park and valley.

The Lake Simcoe Fisheries Assessment Unit began exploring trawling gear and techniques in 1989, and from 1990-92 conducted an annual bottom trawling program in the lake. In 1990, the goal of the program was to identify sites suitable for trawling on the eastern side and to determine which species and age groups were vulnerable to the gear. In 1991, the deep water zone was sampled extensively to catch cold water species and multi-panel gill nets were set in tandem with trawl transects to compare size and species composition of the catch. The 1992 goals were to further evaluate the consistency between years in smelt distribution and abundance, and to test the capability of the bottom trawl for sampling across depth contours. This report summarises program results for 1990-92 and evaluates the feasibility and usefulness of bottom trawling as a fisheries assessment technique in Lake Simcoe.

Victoria : Ministry of Environment, Lands & Parks, Fisheries Branch, 1996. 14 p.
MICROLOG 97-00137 (1 fiche)

The British Columbia Angling Guide Policy was put into place in 1990 to ensure continued quality angling. This document summarises the concerns and subsequent recommendations resulting from public consultations at a five-year review of the Policy. The review focused on the management of angling guides, with strong links made between angling guides, the classified waters system, and the angling licensing system. Issues summarised include the provision of quality angling opportunities, angling use plans, licensing, guide allocations and testing, angling guide operating plans, and reporting requirements.

Brittle faulting along the St. Lawrence Valley from Kingston to Cornwall

By M.E. Grier. Ottawa: Atomic Energy Control Board, 1995. v, 20 p. : Bibl. (Report / Canada. Atomic Energy Control Board; INFO-0578) Fold. map not filmed.
MICROLOG 97-00047 (1 fiche)

The upper Saint Lawrence River lies in a belt associated with earthquakes, in particular to the northeast of Cornwall where the belt is associated with the St. Lawrence rift system and to the south-west where it is associated with rifts underlying the north end of the Mississippi embayment. Whether the St. Lawrence rift extends into the lower Great Lakes or farther to the south-west to link up with the rifts in the embayment is the subject of speculation. This study is a first step in assessing whether such an extension of the rift exists. It examines existing work carried out in a 100 kilometre wide belt bisected by the St. Lawrence River from Kingston to Cornwall. The goals of the study are to identify the distribution of rock types in the area and to assess the character and age of faulting reported in the literature. Rock types and known faults have been compiled and edited on an accompanying map, and information on individual faults (and their interpretation) is detailed in the body of the report.

The Institute aims to provide leadership in the battle against mental illness. It strives to improve the quality of life for people affected by mental illness through innovative research, effective clinical care, and dissemination of knowledge. This annual report provides information on activities over the past year. Includes the collaboration with various hospitals around Toronto, presents information on severe mental illness, transferring knowledge from research to practice, and research from the laboratory to the community. The mind-body connection is discussed, as well as the value of consumers and families, increasing psychiatric help to smaller isolated communities in Ontario through on-line, at-home and fly-in services, alternative therapies, and child and youth mental health. Financial statements are included, as well as a list of sources of research funding, and publications produced by the Institute.

Clear limits and real opportunities : the keys to preventing youth crimes

Ottawa : National Crime Prevention Council Canada, 1995. 17, 17 p. Bilingual (Des limites claires et des...).

MICROLOG 97-00382 (1 fiche)

To help answer questions on the future for youth crime prevention, in the summer of 1995, members of the Youth Justice Committee of the National Crime Prevention Council organized meetings with 100 young men and women and 180 adults who work with young people. The meetings were held in six centres across the country - urban, rural and aboriginal. The participants at these meetings shared their ideas about: what young people need; what works to prevent youth crime; and, how to use this knowledge.

This paper examines three small and unrelated areas of commercial tenancy law in Manitoba, examines problems with the current law, and considers whether certain rules still in effect are necessary. The first part of the paper concerns the doctrine of interesse termini, or an interest in a lease, and considers whether the doctrine should be abolished. The second part deals with the obligation on the landlord to give full disclosure of the land title to the tenant, and examines whether exemptions to give disclosure are still valid given the ready searchability of land titles in Manitoba today. The third part concerns defective leases made under powers to lease, and whether tenants who have not entered into possession should be able to save such leases. Recommendations for reform of the law are provided.

Assesses the technical, ergonomic, and financial aspects of six accessible taxis, via an in-service demonstration in four Quebec cities. The report outlines the objectives, preparation, and outcome of the demonstration, and provides recommendations concerning the introduction of accessible taxis. The demonstration involved four different models of six taxis, whose variations in design included lowered floors, raised roofs, front wheel drive, and rear wheel drive. Some models were equipped with a fourth door. Ramps were either stationary or movable. The taxis were compared with other types of vehicles that provide accessible transport. Assessments were conducted between April 1991 and March 1992, during which period the vehicles travelled 400,000 kilometres and carried almost 21,000 persons with disabilities.

Presents an analysis of the relative costs of doing business in Canada and the United States. The study included the development of illustrative business scenarios and is based on current tax rates, cost factors, and exchange rates. A computer-based financial model was used to compare typical operating costs from start-up to ten years of operation for facilities in 15 cities (seven in the US and eight in Canada). The study examined the impact of location on key location-sensitive capital and operating costs for seven industries (auto parts, environmental waste treatment, frozen foods, medical devices, pharmaceuticals, software, and telecommunications). Each facility was assumed to have sales in excess of $10 million and a minimum of 100 employees. The analysis focused on the costs of establishing facilities on 5-10 acre sites in suburban areas zoned for light to medium industrial purposes. Specific location-sensitive cost factors examined included labour, land, construction, electricity, transportation, interest, and taxes.

The equation is developed on the basis of energy-use simulations using the old and new versions of HOT2000 and a set of 119 R-2000 house designs. Terms and parameters of the new equation are established and assigned values which are intended to result in a significant improvement in the energy efficiency of R-2000 houses built to the new standard. The new target equation is described and the estimated impact of the energy components of the new R-2000 technical requirements is assessed.

It analyses export cartels, noting the different types of cartels, their theoretical logic, their self-liquidating nature and enforcement of member discipline, and the types of cartels found in specific sectors. Case studies of certain cartels, notably for diamonds and for tin, are included. The paper also outlines policies governments can use to fight off export cartels and describes the treatment of export cartels by major industrialized countries (Canada, United States, Japan, and European Union). Finally, policy implications regarding immunity for export cartels and anti-cartel multilateral obligations are discussed.

Prediction of sonar performance is an essential step in the design and development of large sonar systems. The sonar equation is most often used to predict detection performance, assuming constant mean values for signal and noise. Unfortunately, this analysis fails to account for changes in mean signal and noise conditions that may vary over hours, days, or months. In the case of shipping noise and a horizontal towed array, the mean noise background may vary dramatically as ships move in and out of the main lobe of the beam pattern of a receiver. This report shows the extent to which computing probability density functions for actual receiver beam patterns, as well as the imposition of a constant ambient noise background over individual ship interferers, alters ship resolution gain (SRG) estimates. The report describes a new model for SRG which produces gain values consistent with results of experimental trials and which includes a realistic implementation of the array beam patterns and a diffuse background noise which prevents the gains from becoming inordinately large.

Describes a feeding trial performed to determine the cause of hair loss and loss of condition in cows, and bone defects in new-born calves (congenital progressive posterior paralysis or CPPP). The trial was designed to determine whether feeding suspect mouldy cereal straw to pregnant beef cows during the winter can cause the appearance of CPPP. In the trial, five cows received the mouldy straw and five received a dry (control) straw. Both groups of cows also received barley and a mineral mix. Identification of the moulds in the straw led to a hypothesis concerning the cause of the observed CPPP.

This paper briefly compares some of the constitutional options and proposals put forth in the past 15 years, largely in the context of the debate over the Meech Lake Accord and Quebec's five conditions for acceding to the Constitution Act of 1982, which the Accord addressed. The first part of the paper sketches the situation from just before the Quebec referendum of 1980, through the patriation of the Constitution, to the 1987 Meech Lake Accord. The second part covers the Accord itself, including the reaction to Quebec's five conditions for signing it, and events up to June 1990, when the Accord ran out of time. The second part then goes on to describe how the five conditions were treated in the September 1991 federal proposals, in the Beaudoin-Dobbie Report of 1992, and the Charlottetown consensus agreement of August 1992. Part three covers events from Meech Lake to the 1992 Referendum on the Charlottetown Agreement.

Since the emergence of new technologies like photocopyers, video recorders, computers, and the information highway, copyright has become increasingly complex. A long-awaited reform of the 1921 Copyright Act, Bill C-60 (1987) addressed some of the issues raised by the new technologies, and additional amendments are still pending. This report attempts to explain how copyright works, first outlining the current provisions of Canada's Copyright Act. It then summarises the more important changes made under Bill C-60 and subsequent legislation in order to plane the forthcoming revisions in context, and discusses selected areas of copyright reform. These include the creation of neighbouring rights, possible changes to the fair dealing exemption, and the exemptions for the educational sector.

The Cost-effectiveness of home care, a rigorous review of the literature : background paper

Saskatoon, SK : Health Services Utilization & Research Commission, 1996. iii, 81 p. : Bibl.
MICROLOG 97-00559 (1 fiche)

The purpose of this literature review is to provide information on the results of economic evaluations of the cost-effectiveness of home care. The review is organised using three distinct models of home care: home care as a substitute for acute care; home care as a substitute for long-term care; and home care as a preventive service. Under each model, the review identifies specific services and patient groups for which a separate economic evaluation literature exists. Most studies reviewed are either cost-minimisation studies or cost-effectiveness studies which used non-economic tools to evaluate patient outcomes. Cost-effectiveness studies go one step beyond cost-minimisation studies and use physical, social, emotional, and mental evaluative tools to measure outcomes in units other than dollars. A number of studies were able to piggy-back on randomised controlled trials. Costs were collected mainly from insurance billing data, and most studies considered only those costs accruing to the providers.

By January 1997, when all institutions for adults with a mental handicap or multiple disabilities in British Columbia will have closed, former residents of those institutions will reside in the community. This report examines alternatives to current practices in addressing the housing and support needs of those individuals, and is intended to facilitate discussion among stakeholders about the direction that service delivery should take. The report provides information on these alternatives, as gathered via interviews and a literature review, in six sections: service delivery frameworks (two options, supported living and individualised funding); individual-controlled housing, with options emphasizing increasing the individual's opportunity to exercise control in a home environment; facilitation, or options for facilitating anything from friendship to the achievement of lifestyle goals; living arrangements with a built-in support component; staffing, including alternatives in terms of who is paid for the provision of support services; and mechanisms, an assortment of options important for facilitating the goals of community living or some of the other options discussed.

To provide the ability to produce frequency-time-intensity signal displays which contain known narrow-band clutter and threat signatures, the CutBuilder software tool was developed. CutBuilder is a general tool that allows a user to produce FTI displays, known as cuts, that contain specific information from a number of different sources. Specifically, the tool allows aspects of two different FTI displays to be manipulated and merged to produce a realistic combination. The tool was developed in C on a UNIX workstation and requires a number of libraries to be included, such as the Sonar Display Utility. This report describes the development of the CutBuilder tool, including functional requirements, design issues, development of the user interface, and implementation. The report also includes a user manual covering files, displays, commands, macro language, and output. Sample screens are provided.

Damned If we don't : some reflections on antidumping and competition policy

This paper reviews a number of issues related to the appropriateness of an anti-dumping regime, particularly within a free trade area, as an instrument for disciplining cross-border corporate pricing behaviour. The benchmark chosen to address the economic adequacy of this regime is that of market power and the resulting capacity of private sector firms to engage in predatory pricing. The paper briefly outlines the principal deficiencies of current anti-dumping practice and provides several suggestions as to the technical issues that an anti-dumping reform process might be able to address over time. The paper also outlines several hypothetical examples of how competition policy regimes, with no treaty-based disciplines to sustain them, could be distorted if captured by import protectionists facing tighter rules governing the use of anti-dumping. It argues for developing binding international guidelines to ensure such a capture could not occur in the future, and presents a tentative list of such binding criteria that could guide the enforcement of competition policy within the free trade area. The paper concludes with a discussion on the gradually changing dynamic in the United States that could increase the prospects for anti-dumping reform.

Dangerous liaisons : the World Trade Organization and the environmental agenda

There is a growing interest in the use of trade restrictions to advance environmental goals at the international level. Accompanying proposals for such trade restrictions are calls for amendments to international trade rules under the World Trade Organization (WTO) to provide greater latitude for trade action. This paper addresses the proposals for change, attempts to boil them down to their basics, considers their implications, and suggests a way forward in the development of international trade rules. The paper makes the case that the liaison between the WTO and the environmental agenda contemplated in many of the proposals would be a dangerous one. Arguments are developed regarding the view that changing the rules to allow for easier use of discriminatory and extra-territorial trade restrictions may have short-term appeal but would be counterproductive in the long run.

In light of the implementation of the North American Free Trade Agreement and conclusion of multi-lateral trade negotiations, this paper briefly summarises the outstanding substantive agenda, including both old and new trade policy issues. The paper then focuses on the modalities for extending trade liberalisation further; in particular, where Canada should focus its attention over the next 12-24 months, given the likely trading environment for the rest of the decade, the shifting nature of real market opportunities, and finite negotiating resources. The pros and cons of Canadian negotiating options are weighed, including sectoral versus free trade, new multilateral trade agreements, comprehensive bilateral free trade with selected partners, and seeking greater regional free trade. The paper concludes by suggesting a four-pronged approach.

This paper attempts to answer some questions related to those differences. It begins with a discussion of traditional or neo-classical theories of economic growth and provides a theoretical foundation for subsequent empirical evidence. The paper then examines the more recent theoretical and empirical evidence for economic growth which attempts to overcome the perceived inadequacies of traditional growth theory. The final section discusses the implications of the findings for Canadian policies, with emphasis on the kinds of policies Canada should consider pursuing with regard to foreign aid and international financial institutions.

This report contains studies of the relationships between the toxicity of sediments and the concentration of contaminants, and investigates the possibility of predicting the toxicity from the contaminant concentrations. It also demonstrates the importance of data processing in the detection of unusual results and possible large errors in analytical or toxicity tests. In the studies, three sets of published data on the concentrations of contaminants in sediments, sediment toxicity, and (in one set) species abundance and diversity were evaluated by principal components analysis. Presentation of data in the form of projections on principal component planes facilitated data interpretation. Relationships between concentrations of sediment components led to estimates of missing values and to detection of likely erroneous results. Data processing techniques used included linear regression and artificial neural networks.

This book is based on a recognition of the importance of understanding the history of disability, the way in which policy and programs have been developed, and the changes that are occurring and are possible for the future. It traces the development of services, programs, and policies within the frameworks provided by the rights guaranteed by human rights instruments. The book is organised in three main sections. The first examines the history and philosophy of how societies have treated people with disabilities, keeping in mind the human rights principles. Section two explores critical issues that individuals with disabilities face in their daily life, focusing on employment, housing, education, recreation, relationships, safety, security, child care, technology, and health. Each of the 11 chapters in this section begins by tracing the development of policies, programs, and services, and provides a view of current trends. The final section explores the ways in which change can be achieved to ensure citizenship rights for all Canadians, highlighting the advocacy initiatives of various organisations of and for people with disabilities working with a clear agenda for social change.

New Brunswickers have voiced their commitment to the sustainable management and development of their coastal resources. In response to this commitment the province has developed, in co-operation with a number of stakeholder groups, a proposed Provincial Land Use Policy for Coastal Lands. This document contains a draft of this proposed Provincial Land Use Policy for Coastal Lands and has two primary purposes: to present the content of the proposed policy and put it forward for public review and to increase public awareness and to encourage additional public involvement and input into the policy development process.

Cette publication a comme objectif de présenter aux enseignants et aux élèves un aperçu de la façon dont la Charte canadienne des droits et libertés s'applique à l'enseignement public. Elle s'efforce de déterminer comment les droits de la personnes conférés par la Charte, y compris les droits des élèves, sont équilibrés ou pondérés en fonction des intérêts de l'ensemble de la société. On y aborde un certain nombre de sujets, comme les droits et responsabilités des élèves, soit le droit de parole et d'expression, la présentation personnelle, la liberté d'association et l'égalité à l'école. Cette publication traite également de certains problèmes comme les fouilles, perquisitions et saisies, de même que les punitions et le droit procédural. On y fait également appel à la jurisprudence pour analyser la façon dont les tribunaux interprètent les questions touchant la loi scolaire à la lumière des droits constitutionnels.

Dans un discours prononcé le 13 février 1996, soit peu de temps après sa nomination, le ministre des Affaires étrangères, l'hon. Lloyd Axworthy, a rappelé que le respect des droits de l'homme est un élément essentiel de l'identité canadienne qui, par conséquent, doit occuper une place importante dans le programme d'action lié à la politique étrangère du Canada. Dans ce document, nous traitons principalement des questions et défis qui se posent dans le contexte de la politique étrangère du Canada et cherchons à préciser les initiatives que le Canada pourrait prendre, unilatéralement ou dans un cadre bilatéral ou multilatéral, pour harmoniser les politiques commerciales aux objectifs visés dans le domaine des droits de la personne.

This paper is intended to help school districts interested in establishing early intervention programs in the primary grades. It provides background information on programs for early intervention of learning (primarily reading) difficulties. The emphasis is on literacy acquisition due to the importance of success in reading as a foundation for further academic success and to the correlation of literacy acquisition with a number of other outcomes such as positive self-esteem. The paper includes a review of literature on early reading intervention and a summary of early intervention efforts in British Columbia, the rest of Canada, New Zealand, and the United States. The paper concludes with an outline of issues to be considered in establishing an early intervention program.

Deformed chironomid larvae have been reported from Port Hope harbour, Lake Ontario. Radium and uranium refining operations at Port Hope have contaminated the harbour with uranium-238 and, to a lesser extent, thorium-232 decay chain radionuclides and several heavy metals. This paper presents results of a study undertaken to determine whether the observed chironomid deformities are the result of a radiotoxic response to radionuclides in the harbour sediment or a chemotoxic response to heavy metals. The investigators exposed chironomid larvae to concentrations of lead-210 and stable lead representative of contaminant levels in the harbour. Concentrations varied from 100 to 2000 becquerels of lead-210, and from 0.5 to 35 milligrams of stable lead, per gram of dry sediment. Effects of exposure on the survival and growth of larvae and the level of deformities are noted.

Douglas fir plantations are difficult to establish in clear-cut openings in dry subzones in the Cariboo Forest Region of British Columbia. This study tested four mechanical site preparation treatments as methods for reducing environmental stresses and discouraging cattle use, thereby improving seedling survival and growth. It was conducted for both Douglas fir and lodgepole pine seedlings, on grazed and ungrazed areas of clearcuts in the interior Douglas fir and sub-boreal spruce biogeoclimatic zones of the Region. Investigators established a smooth wire enclosure on each of the two test sites; within the enclosure and on adjacent ground outside, they tested four site preparation treatments: V-plow, ripper plow, V-plow and ripper plow combination, and control. Seedling microclimate was monitored for three growing seasons. This report includes data on fifth-year seedling survival and condition, total height growth (1988-92), and diameter growth (1989-92).

comment, and outlines the choices that have to be made in the near future. The first part of the paper discussed how government revenues and expenditures have grown in recent years, explains why the government finds itself in the current serious financial circumstances, and forecasts what will happen if nothing is done. The second part examines where the government spends its money now, the demands currently being made, and expenditures that could seriously worsen the fiscal situation. The third part looks at how expenditures could be cut, and the fourth and fifth parts examine revenues and the options for increasing tax revenues, notably from resource development. The final section outlines the consultation process.

This paper begins by outlining the basics of the old UI program and then presents two sets of principles that can be used to evaluate the old UI program and the new employment insurance program: principles of fairness in a user-funded insurance program and in a public income transfer program. The third section of the paper considers the Bill's three main structural reforms: using hours of work as the unit of account, a new intensity rule, and new claw-back provisions. The final section describes the advantages of a two-stage process for phasing in major structural changes.

An Epidemiological case-control study of abomasal ulcers in young beef calves within Saskatchewan herds : final report

By Carl S. Ribble, Eugene D. Janzen and Murray D. Leiniski. Regina : Agriculture Development Fund, 1996. 37 p. : ill., Bibl.
MICROLOG 97-00546 (1 fiche)

Describes a project that used two separate case control studies to investigate two of the more popular theories about ulcer causation in unweaned beef calves. One theory attributes the ulcers to bacterial agents, including Helicobacter pylori and Clostridium perfringens type A. To study this theory, abomasal tissues were collected during necropsy from calves dying of either a perforating or lethal hemorrhagic abomasal ulcer. Each of the 30 cases studied was matched with a control. A variety of culture growth and microscopic staining techniques were used to search for the presence of bacterial agents. The other theory involves hairballs as the cause. This was investigated by surveying 115 veterinary practices on their experiences with encountering hairballs in necropsies of dead calves. Case control statistical techniques were used to compare the presence of hairballs in different disease categories to determine any association between hairballs and perforating ulcers. Implications of the findings for proposed preventive techniques are discussed.

Reports the findings of a project undertaken to examine the feasibility of using hospital accounting data for making comparative estimates of the costs of acute inpatient care across major urban hospitals in Manitoba. The five hospitals studied were all non-teaching urban hospitals that reported accounting data to Manitoba Health through the Financial Information System (FIS). Patient care costs were also estimated for the same five hospitals using summarised accounting data reported to Statistics Canada and Manitoba Health on part 1 of the hospital statistics form. The project compared estimates derived from these two data sources to test the feasibility of using HS1 data, available for all hospitals, to calculate acute per diem costs when FIS data are not available. Project methodology is described, results are presented, and limitations of the results are discussed.

L'accessibilité des différents services de transport représente une préoccupation de première importance chez Transports Canada. Afin de se doter d'un outil permettant d'optimiser cette accessibilité, le CCT a mandaté la firme des Consultants Genicom Inc. Pour effectuer une étude de faisabilité sur la création d'une banque de données anthropométriques sur les personnes âgées et les personnes handicapées pour la population canadienne. Les points abordés dans cette étude de faisabilité portent sur les points suivants : revue de la littérature; classification; échantillonnage; identification des variables anthropométriques; prise de mesures; modélisation; étude de marché; et, recherche d'organismes pour le financement.

Étude de la formule de subvention sans condition

MICROLOG 97-00062 (2 fiche)

Cette étude élabore une formule de répartition de la subvention sans condition qui répond aux principes établis des finances publiques et qui reconnaît le contexte financier actuel au Nouveau-Brunswick. Ce rapport détermine d'abord les principes de conception d'une formule de répartition de la subvention sans condition et examine différentes méthodes d'application. L'impact de divers autres modèles sur les municipalités est aussi examiné. Les formules sont évaluées et des recommandations sont formulées en vue de la conception d'une nouvelle formule.

Étude de la gestion des ressources dans un système multi-agent appliquée au Centre de recherche et de sauvetage de Trenton : rapport final

Par Bernard Moulin. Valcartier, PQ : Centre de recherche de la défense, Valcartier, 1995. 82 p. : ill., Bibl.
MICROLOG 97-00489 (1 fiche)

Dans ce document, nous entamons une réflexion sur les concepts que devrait intégrer un modèle d'agent qui tienne compte de la gestion des ressources. Un but important de notre étude est d'intégrer la gestion des ressources humaines et temporelles à la gestion des ressources matérielles. Nous essayons d'abord d'expliquer comment les agents et le temps constituent des ressources. Nous développons ensuite une taxonomie de classes de ressources qui intègre les ressources matérielles, humaines et temporelles. Nous essayons ensuite de positionner la gestion des ressources par rapport aux tâches du domaine et aux autres fonctions de l'agent. Nous développons un formalisme de spécification des besoins en ressources des agents pour l'accomplissement de leurs tâches. Nous présentons diverses architectures de systèmes de gestion des ressources basées sur les concepts de gestionnaire de ressources et de réservoir de ressources. Nous illustrons notre approche à l'aide de deux exemples tirés de l'analyse des tâches d'un contrôleur du RCC de Trenton. Nous examinons enfin, comment pourraient être traitées les requêtes de ressources faites par les agents vers les gestionnaires de ressources.

La subvention sans condition a depuis toujours joué un rôle important au Nouveau-Brunswick dans les finances municipales. Elle représente un élément primordial des arrangements fiscaux provinciaux-municipaux. Établie en 1967, à la suite de l'adoption des recommandations de la Commission royale sur la finance et la taxation municipale, mieux connue comme la Commission Byrne, la subvention sans condition a été un volet important de la réforme radicale de cette époque. En octobre 1995, le gouvernement a annoncé une étude de la formule de subvention sans condition en vue de la mise en oeuvre d'une nouvelle formule pour l'année financière municipale 1997. Ce document présente les résultats de cette étude.

Describes a project that monitored and evaluated the performance and impacts of antilock braking systems (ABS) installed on double tanker trucks under actual fleet operating conditions. Vehicle monitoring in 1992-93 included real-time on-board recording of ABS system operation as well as collection of detailed records of maintenance and operational parameters potentially affected by the presence of ABS systems. These records were compiled for similar vehicles with and without ABS, enabling comparisons and the quantification of the impact of ABS systems. Impacts evaluated included costs, driver attitudes, reliability, and effects on driving safety. Appendices include details of the data logging system used in the study as well as test data.

The objective of this study was to evaluate infrared tympanic thermometers (ITTs) on hypothermic subjects and under operationally relevant ambient conditions. Eight subjects (6 male, 2 female) were cooled in 8-10 degree C water for 25 minutes on three occasions, and tympanic temperatures obtained with three brands of ITTs were compared to three other core temperature estimates (oesophageal, rectal, and ear canal) during the cold water immersions. Similar comparisons were made in a second series of experiments conducted in cold air environments. Results of the comparisons are presented, along with an evaluation of the performance of the ITTs.

The Canada-Northwest Territories (NWT) Cooperation Agreement for French and Aboriginal Languages, 1991/92 to 1993/94, had the following objectives: for French, to provide French language services and to ensure implementation of French as an official language in the NWT; and for Aboriginal languages, to help preserve, develop, and enhance those languages in the NWT, and to provide services in those languages so as to assist in their implementation as official languages in the NWT. This report presents an evaluation of the Agreement conducted to determine the extent to which its goals have been achieved. The evaluation was carried out using an activity review (primarily addressing the areas of rationale, effectiveness, and alternatives) and an impact analysis assessing the short term and projecting the long term effects of the Agreement on the various stakeholders. Part one includes a description of the evaluation methodology and profiles and findings related to Aboriginal and French language use and access to services. Part two contains supporting documentation and results of a community survey of Aboriginal languages.

This report brings with an exploration of several concepts, mostly from socio-linguistics, that are useful for thinking about language maintenance. The current status of Aboriginal languages in Canada is then considered through examination of census and other broad data, indicators of factors that influence language change, scales of language vitality, and through comparisons with other groups, especially recent immigrants to North America. This is followed by a longer section on matters relating directly to activities for active maintenance of Aboriginal languages in Canada. The main focus is on language in education, but other matters considered include Aboriginal values concerning their ancestral languages, literacy in Aboriginal languages, and community activities for language development. Finally, the situation of Aboriginal languages and language maintenance activities in other countries is reviewed.

Two model variants were used: a full scale model of the C-76 armour-piercing fin-stabilised discarding-sabot (APFSDS) projectile and a generic APFSDS model. The relative attitudes and locations of the sabot/projectile system were frozen in the test section, providing 12 configurations of each variant. The results obtained at Mach 3.5 and 4 are presented. In addition, computational fluid dynamic calculations were performed on the generic configurations using a three dimensional Navier-Stokes code, TASCflow. The computational results are compared to the wind tunnel results.

MICROLOG 97-00244 (22 fiche)

Existing traffic volumes to the north of the present termination of Highway 410 in Brampton, Ontario result in congestion of the existing roadway network, and major improvements are required to handle future traffic volumes. The purpose of this study is to determine the type of transportation facility that should be recommended and to locate a best alignment for that facility in order to protect the appropriate property requirements. It is proposed to construct an 8.5-kilometre divided freeway from Bovaird Drive to connect with Highway 10 north of Snelgrove. This report discusses the rationale for the freeway and its alternatives, the environmental assessment process, the existing conditions within the study area, and the advantages and drawbacks of the various route alignment alternatives. It then details the recommended route, its design features, the probable environmental impacts, and methods for mitigation of impacts. Appendices include selected correspondence regarding the proposed highway, noise reports, a traffic analysis, design criteria, archaeological and heritage resources reports, a hydrology design report, a cost estimate, and reports on highway interchanges, natural environment, and stormwater management.

This paper seeks to determine whether north Asia (China, Japan, Hong Kong, Taiwan, and eastern Russia) is becoming more integrated economically and if so, at what pace. It examines trade, investment, and other economic data, as well as the commercial and development policies of north Asian countries to determine whether recent economic changes and policy measures are contributing to a merging of the region's markets for goods, services, capital, and labour. The paper looks at trends in and conditions for trade, investment, and economic integration in north Asia, including intra-regional and extra-regional trade and investment; host country policies and factors influencing those trends and conditions; the relationship between foreign direct investment in the region and the area's trade patterns with some of the world's major economies; energy needs and resources; environmental conditions, consequences, and opportunities; and current and proposed regional institutional arrangements. The paper also attempts to find whether the trade and investment trends in the region should concern the Canadian government, and what could be done to strengthen Canadian participation in north Asian growth.

The review attempts to increase opportunities for local control over the land development process, while acknowledging that increasingly limited financial resources must be used in the most effective manner. The review discusses current problems in the provision of building lots, such as the subsidies provided and lack of cost recovery, and how the territorial government can assist community governments to develop land. This paper outlines the current land development and pricing process and the principles for a land development strategy; discusses land development and pricing issues; and reviews options available for a land development process which strengthens community control and addresses affordability issues.

In research on the development of new explosives and munitions which are less sensitive to accidental detonations by fire or hot fragments, it is important to understand the risks associated with thermal heating of explosive materials. Computer modelling is a practical way to help in this understanding since it is flexible and relatively inexpensive compared to actual experiments. This report describes two test cases, one for a fire and one for a hot fragment attack on a munition. The desired features important for modelling these cases are outlined, such as the proper material models, coupled thermal and mechanical responses, and numerical considerations. Various commercially available finite element programs are then evaluated in view of the desired features. Recommendations for a suitable program are given.

The study used a model that replicated the design characteristics and proportions of large Canadian ferries, and tests were undertaken in an open-water towing tank. Input parameters for the model test program included the loading conditions testing the capsizing responses of SOLAS minimum criteria, the residual freeboard after damage, the freeing port area, and the presence or absence of a centreline casing. The measured output included model motions, volume of water on deck, and the significant wave heights at which the model stayed upright and at which it capsized. The program covered wave heights of up to 7 metres. Test results were analysed for consistent patterns in the behaviour of the model with respect to static and dynamic parameters.

A 1989 federal government report on nutrition in Canada had three key recommendations targeted to the school system: integrate nutrition into curricula, ensure that foods served in schools are consistent with nutrition guidelines, and initiate food and nutrition policies in schools. In Nova Scotia, the extent to which any of these recommendations have been considered or implemented has not yet been determined. This report presents results of a study investigating part of the above gap in knowledge. A questionnaire survey collected information on six main issues: food services offered at Nova Scotia schools; types of foods offered; existence of school food policies; food-related facilities available at school; and school fund raising using food. The appendix contains a copy of the questionnaire and a tabulation of survey results.

For effective and appropriate sanctions

By Jean Prévost. Ottawa : External Affairs & International Trade Canada, 1993. 60 p. : Bibl. (Policy staff paper / Canada. Dept. of Foreign Affairs & International Trade ; SP22A) (Economic papers / Canada. Dept. of Foreign Affairs & International Trade ; 93/04)
MICROLOG 97-00497 (1 fiche)

The purpose of this paper is to address the neglected issue of the effectiveness of economic sanctions imposed by Canada. It presents a brief survey of economic and non-military sanctions, the legal instruments available to the federal government with respect to sanctions, and attempts to assess the consequences of Canadian moves against countries guilty of misconduct in the eyes of the international community. It then lists the advantages and disadvantages of possible sanctions (diplomatic and political measures, cultural and communications-related measures, economic measures) and discusses some practical considerations involved in applying sanctions. These considerations are those related both to the target country and to the sanctioning country.

Forensic DNA testing, which attempts to match biological samples of suspects with biological specimens left at the scene of the crime, has recently become a powerful investigative tool for police. Bill C-104 addresses issues by providing legislative schemes whereby the police may obtain warrants to obtain bodily specimens for the purposes of DNA testing. This document precisely looks at forensic DNA testing.

Forest sector benchmarking initiative, developing a customer focus : final report

MICROLOG 97-00464 (2 fiche)

This report contains seven case studies of different customer focus strategies, six in the forest products industry and one in the automotive industry. The objective of the study is to provide a benchmark for the Canadian forest products industry in the form of leading-edge, customer-focused strategies. The candidates selected for the case studies were considered to have some of the better examples of customer focus strategies in the industry, with one company selected from another industry for purposes of contrast. The case studies illustrate a range of strategies undertaken by large and small companies, making different products, and serving different customers. These strategies include: manufacturing products to serve specific needs; processing products to meet higher specifications; providing value-added services; and differentiating the product through attributes not related to product quality or other product characteristics. Factors that are critical to success of these strategies are noted.

This report describes a project addressing one approach to controlling grasshoppers, a pest that causes serious losses in cereal crops. The approach studied involves enhancing the insecticidal properties of bacteria that naturally occur in the guts of grasshoppers. A candidate bacterium has been identified and genetically engineered to accept a number of genetic determinants with the potential to compromise the health of the insect. The approach described is a stepwise one, still requiring an additional factor that can promote entry into gut epithelial cells.

Global strategies and foreign direct investment : implications for trade and the Canadian economy

Dept. of Foreign Affairs & International Trade ; SP41A) (Trade policy series / Canada. Dept. of Foreign Affairs & International Trade ; 94/07) MICROLOG 97-00458 (1 fiche)

This paper accepts that globalisation is a force in international economics and focuses on one aspect of the new economic reality: the effects of global strategies of MNEs and foreign direct investment (FDI) on host economies. It begins with a definition of a MNE and argues that a global corporation is a special type of MNE. It then considers whether MNEs have become stateless and examines the impetus behind the emergence of global corporations. Effects of global corporations on investment are examined using evidence from theory and from Canadian data. The effect of the presence of foreign-controlled MNEs on research and development in the host country is also discussed, and the evidence concerning whether MNEs create or divert trade is evaluated with reference to data on intra-firm trade. Finally, the paper discusses policy implications of MNEs and FDI in Canada, and makes policy suggestions regarding policy independence, trade, technology transfer, and fostering domestic industry competition.

This paper identifies the key characteristics of economic globalisation and outlines the broad implications for public policy. It begins by expressing scepticism about the extent of the globalisation of economic processes and the emergence of global or stateless firms. It examines trends in trade in goods and services, intra-industry and intra-firm trade, and foreign direct investment, and reviews Canadian competitiveness in the global context. The challenges of globalisation for Canada are discussed along with suggested trade policy responses in such areas as investment, competition, trade and technology policy, research and development, and environmental issues.

Globalization : the impact on the trade and investment dynamic

Dept. of Foreign Affairs & International Trade ; SP25A) (Trade policy series / Canada. Dept. of Foreign Affairs & International Trade ; 93/07) MICROLOG 97-00449 (1 fiche)

This paper examines the relationship and linkages between trade and investment flows. An initial discussion on the importance and impact of trade on economic growth is followed by an examination of the trade and investment linkages, with particular emphasis on causality and the direct investment impacts on the balance of payments of host and investing countries. The analysis also examines FDI-related trade and then recalculates traditional merchandise trade balance from a residence basis to an ownership basis. An examination of the FDI boom in the late 1980s-early 1990s, discussing the major factors contributing to this growth, is followed by an analysis of intra-firm trade flows (focusing on Canada-United States intra-firm trade). The Canadian experience as a host for FDI as well as the growth and evolution of Canadian direct investment abroad is then reviewed. The paper concludes with discussion of policy considerations for Canada based on its roles as a country attracting foreign direct investment (FDI), as an outward investing country, and as a trading nation in world markets.

Healthy eating at school : guidelines for taking action around school food policy in your community

Halifax : Dept. of Health, 1993. ii, 54 p.
MICROLOG 97-00151 (1 fiche)

This booklet has been assembled to help those who are interested in the food that is available in Nova Scotia schools and who wish to take action to improve the food choices at school. It begins by explaining what a school food policy is and why one should be developed. It then sets out steps for taking action: Identifying the issue or issues at stake, forming a representative food policy committee, clarifying the committee's values, agreeing on a food and nutrition policy, involving the broader community, putting the policy together, finding out what the community will do to support the policy, setting the policy framework, writing the draft policy, and establish and evaluate the policy. Background information is included throughout on such matters as the Nova Scotia education system, typical school food policies, and food standards and guidelines. The appendix contains examples of actual policies.

This study compares heat strain while wearing nuclear, biological, and chemical (NBC) protective clothing following a hot-wet (HW) or hot-dry (HD) heat acclimation protocol. In the study, 22 males were assigned to groups HW, HD, or control and were evaluated during continuous treadmill walking while wearing lightweight combat clothing and during intermittent exercise while wearing the NBC protective clothing. Results of measurements presented include rectal and skin temperatures, heart rate, sweat evaporation, and tolerance time.

When AIDS first arose in the United States in the early 1980s, it was dubbed "gay-related immunodeficiency disease" because it appeared to afflict only homosexual and bisexual men. As more cases were diagnosed, however, it became apparent that one did not have to be gay or even male in order to acquire HIV. This document specifically looks at heterosexual AIDS.

The majority of the housing stock has reached an age of 25 to 30 years and is in need of high levels of capital investment. This work is distinct from normal maintenance because, eventually, building components wear out or become deteriorated or become obsolete. Then major repairs and replacements of components and systems must be performed in these ageing buildings. This document is a study on high-rise apartment repair needs assessment.

ICEYE, development of an aircraft ice accretion warning and monitoring system, phase 1

Prepared for Transportation Development Centre, Policy and Coordination, Transport Canada ; by NDT Technologies Inc. Bale d'Urfe, PQ : The Corporation, 1995. xi, 75 p. : ill., Bibl. MICROLOG 97-00395 (1 fiche)

Describes a proof-of-concept experimental exploration of the use of ultrasonic techniques to detect and measure ice accretion on aircraft surfaces. In the first stage of the investigation, extensive laboratory testing was performed using a test fixture and a variety of general purpose ultrasonic probes and instrumentation. The second stage involved extensive testing of four pre-prototype sensor arrays when exposed to climatic conditions representative of those experienced by aircraft during ground operations in Canada. Experimental results were analysed to produce a signal matrix table which provides the different signal patterns when each of the different test conditions were present. The experiments indicate that considerable changes in recorded ultrasonic waveforms and signal pattern occur for very specific combinations of sensors, their placement, type of pulsing pattern, and frequencies. The proposed concept promises to lead to significant improvement in flight safety under icing conditions, without requiring major structural modifications to the aircraft. CA ND PS SC TR

Describes differences in housing choices of immigrants and non-immigrants in Canada and in Montreal, Toronto, and Vancouver. It also compares the housing choices of non-permanent residents to those of immigrants and non-immigrants. The report focuses on age-specific average household sizes and household headship rates, as well as tenure and dwelling type choices. Information is based on an analysis of unpublished 1991 census data, focus group discussions, and a review of literature. The report also explores how immigrant housing choices vary by factors such as place of birth, period of immigration, and income, and includes a multivariate analysis of tenure choice. An assessment is made of the implications of identified differences in immigrant and non-immigrant choices for long-term projections of household growth. CA DE SA SS ST

Ce rapport décrit les écarts entre les choix de logement des immigrants et ceux des non-immigrants au Canada et à Montréal, Toronto et Vancouver. Il compare également les choix de logement des résidents non permanents à ceux des immigrants et des non-immigrants. Se fondant sur une analyse de données non publiées du recensement du Canada de 1991, sur les comptes rendus de réunions de groupes de discussion et sur l'étude d'ouvrages de référence, il vient mettre à jour une étude précédente réalisée pour le compte de la SCHL à l'aide des données du recensement de 1986. Ce rapport porte surtout sur les tailles moyennes des ménages et les taux de chef de ménage ainsi que sur les modes d'occupation et les choix de logement propres à chaque groupe d'âge. En outre, il explore de quelle manière les choix de logement des immigrants varient en fonction de facteurs comme le lieu de naissance, la période d'immigration et le revenu, et il renferme une analyse multivariée des choix de mode d'occupation. On y évalue les implications des écarts observés dans les choix de logement des immigrants et des non-immigrants sur les prévisions en matière de croissance des ménages à long terme. CA DE SA SS ST

The Impact of exports : an input-output analysis of Canadian trade

Dept. of Foreign Affairs & International Trade ; SP58A) (Trade development series / Canada. Dept. of Foreign Affairs & International Trade ; 94/24) MICROLOG 97-00460 (1 fiche)

This paper uses the 1990 version of the Statistics Canada National Input-Output Model to analyse Canadian exports by industry to assist in identifying those industries that are best suited to export. Such industries provide the maximum domestic gains from trade through increased gross domestic product, increased employment at relatively high average wages, and increased economic activity in intermediate input industries. By analysing exports on an industry by industry basis, the paper's input-output analysis provides a number of lessons regarding the appropriate approach to designing and implementing policies and programs that focus on enhancing Canadian export performance. By running the model four separate times for exports to the United States, the European Union, Asia-Pacific countries minus the US, and the rest of the world, the paper also analysed Canadian exports by industry to those regions and showed whether any market emerged as the best export destination. L'utilisation de senseurs qui opèrent à des longueurs d'onde autres que celles du visible est en progression constante. Une contre-mesure efficace et peu coûteuse est l'utilisation d'écrans fumigènes multispectraux. Cependant, ces écrans sont inefficaces contre les senseurs qui opèrent aux longueurs d'ondes millimétriques. Ce rapport décrit un laser millimétrique, pompé optiquement à l'aide d'un laser CO<sub>2</sub>. Il permet au CRDV d'effectuer des mesures sur une grande plage de longueurs d'ondes dans la région millimétrique.

Les résultats sont présentés sous la forme d'un tableau contenant : la fréquence de pompage, le filtrage requis, la pression optimale d'opération et la puissance de sortie. CA ND PS SC

Applies the current state of knowledge concerning the effects of incentives for safety in industrial settings and in road traffic to the specific purpose of enhancing the safety of long-haul trucking in Canada. Mobility and accident statistics pertaining to recent Canadian and US trucking are reviewed, with attention to the important distinction between incentives for specific behaviours (such as using safety equipment, sobriety, or obeying the speed limit) and incentives for successful avoidance of accidents of the driver's own fault. The disadvantages of the use of disincentives (punishments) as compared to positive incentives (rewards) are also noted. The available evidence on factors that enhance the effectiveness of incentive schemes is evaluated. The report includes a check list of the requirements for maximally effective incentive programs for accident-free operation according to the current state of the art. The issues of benefit-cost ratios of incentive programs and of the possible desirable and undesirable side effects of their implementation are also discussed. BS CA ND SS TR

Indoor air quality and ventilation rates in R-2000 houses : final report

The R-2000 building industry experience suggests that energy targets could be met more cost-effectively if the standard for ventilation rates were reduced. This report examines the implications of reducing the R-2000 design ventilation rates to 75% of the Canadian Standards Association F326 standard. Specifically, it asks whether such reductions would affect the requirement that R-2000 houses have better indoor air quality (IAQ) than the average house. The investigation begins by examining several recent studies of IAQ and producing distributions of the source strengths of substances that affect IAQ such as volatile organics and carbon dioxide. Selected source strength profiles are then used to predict IAQ in 47 new R-2000 houses at various ventilation rates. The resulting substance concentrations are compared with the averages from this study and with existing guidelines.

The adoption of information and telecommunications technologies (IT) is considered a crucial strategic issue since such technologies have long been identified as key factors in international competitiveness. This document presents a study conducted to identify in the current literature appropriate theoretical support and methodological models for measuring the impact of IT on the productivity and competitiveness of small and medium enterprises in Latin America, the Caribbean, and Canada. The first chapter defines and classifies ITs according to different models, and examines the rate of IT diffusion in various countries. Chapter two analyses internal and external factors affecting the adoption of IT. Chapter three discusses the characteristics of the decision making process as a prime adoption factor. The fourth chapter investigates the impact of ITs on productivity, key competitive dimensions, performance, work, and employment. The conclusion provides a brief synthesis and some comments on methodological issues affecting the future design of interview guides or questionnaires.

Analyses a selected sample of projects performed or sponsored by the Canada Centre for Mineral & Energy Technology (CANMET), primarily over the last five years, in order to measure the impact of CANMET programs. The 181 projects selected were divided into two categories according to the primary focus of the research: 90 in support of wealth generation and 91 in support of quality of life. The benefits reported were derived from interviews with industrial partners in the projects, who validated the data and provided verification of the success stories described in this report. Highlights of projects form the bulk of the report, each highlighting giving the name of the CANMET partner, CANMET's role in the project, the technology developed, and the project's economic and quality-of-life impact. The report concludes with a cost-effective analysis of selected CANMET projects.

Japan Trading Corp. : getting the fundamentals right

By I. Prakash Sharma. Ottawa : Dept. of Foreign Affairs & International Trade, 1993. 58 p. : Bibl. (Policy staff paper / Canada. Dept. of Foreign Affairs & International Trade ; SP34A) (Regional trade and economic series / Canada. Dept. of Foreign Affairs & International Trade ; 93/16)
MICROLOG 97-00453 (1 fiche)

The objectives of this paper are to discuss the nature of Japan-United States trade frictions and the measures adopted to resolve them, to review economic arguments that explain post-war growth in Japan, to discuss why hitting Japan with trade management measures most likely will not work, and to draw lessons from Japan's economic success and from the purported US economic decline. The paper argues that policy makers need to recognise Japanese strengths more honestly, target specific trading and investment practices, and accept that Western regimes also retain important protectionist features that can and do distort trade and international investment flows. The implications of the lessons from Japan's economic growth for Canada are discussed.

This paper identifies the special relationships that exist between financial institutions and non-financial firms in the Japanese market, determines whether those relationships are limited to Japanese participants, and considers their effects on trade as well as the appropriate response of trade policy. Sections of the paper cover the Japanese corporate ownership structure, the formal governance of corporate relationships and the anti-monopoly law, the development of informal relationships and the trade implications for foreign firms, and the treatment of foreign financial institutions in Japan (banks and insurance companies) along with the trade implications for those institutions. The paper concludes with specific recommendations aimed at increasing the transparency of inter-corporate relationships in Japan, and improving the access that foreign financial institutions have to Japanese markets. The appendix includes discussion of relations between commercial banks and non-financial firms in North America, and the treatment of foreign commercial banks in North America.

Kisplox Timber Supply Area : timber supply review discussion paper

Victoria : Ministry of Forests, British Columbia Forest Service, 1996. 10 p. : Ill. MICROLOG 97-00134 (1 fiche)

The Kisplox Timber Supply Area (TSA) occupies about 1.22 million hectares in north-western British Columbia. About 26% of the area of the TSA is included in the timber harvesting land base. This report first presents a profile of the TSA, including environmental setting, demographics, employment, communities, forest industry activity, other local industries such as tourism, agriculture, and mining, and First Nations. It then describes the timber supply status in the TSA, including the harvesting land base and annual allowable cut, and reviews the economic, environmental, and community impacts in the TSA and the province resulting from three timber harvest scenarios.

The Kisplox Timber Supply Area (TSA) consists of a total of about 1.22 million hectares of land within the Prince Rupert Forest Region, of which about 318,000 hectares are considered available for timber harvesting and production under current management practices. This analysis assesses how those practices affect the supply of wood available for harvesting over both the short and long term. It also examines the potential changes in timber supply stemming from uncertainties about forest growth and management actions. The appendices include a description of data inputs and assumptions used to derive the timber harvesting land base and to construct the timber supply model for the TSA timber supply review analysis. A glossary is also included.

This guidebook covers the process necessary to determine the lake class for inclusion into operational plans for forest management in the Nelson Forest Region of British Columbia, according to the provincial Forest Practices Code. The guide focuses on forest management activities within the lakeshore management zones around lakes, important elements at the landscape level for supporting biological diversity. The guide includes information on the nature of a lakeshore management zone, the zone classification process, management zone goals determined according to certain basic criteria, requirements for establishment of lakeshore management zones, silvicultural systems and management practices within those zones, and specific management guidelines for the lakeshore management zones on each class of classified lake.

Under the British Columbia Forest Practices Code, the class of every lake lying within an area for which timber harvesting or silviculture activities are planned must be identified in operational plans for the area so that the special values of the lakeshores can be protected. This guide describes how lakes are classified, what the classification means, and the forest management practices that are recommended within the resultant lakeshore management areas. The guide focuses on forest and range management activities carried out within the riparian reserve and lakeshore management zones around lakes. It includes information on the criteria used for classifying lakes and the widths of recommended riparian reserve zones and lakeshore management zones for the various lake classes.

Describes the governing equations and numerical implementation of a computer program which numerically solves the steady laminar incompressible Navier-Stokes equations in two dimensions. The equations are solved in primitive variable form using the pseudo-compressibility approach which converts the equations to a hyperbolic system. The convective terms are upwind differenced using a flux-difference split approach. A line relaxation scheme is used to solve the numerical system of equations. Test cases are presented for flow about a circular cylinder and an airfoil section. Results are compared with numerical results from the well-established ARC2D compressible Navier-Stokes code. Circular cylinder results are also compared with published experimental and numerical results.

Regionalism is re-emerging as one of the most important trends in international relations. Depolarisation of international co-operation patterns and the lifting of the superpower strategic overlay over entire regions has removed some external obstacles to regional organisation, while at the same time intra-state conflicts seem to be on the rise. This paper seeks to demonstrate that progress in the present debate on regional organisation requires a more pragmatic look at current regional trends at the ground level. It examines where regional groupings have been effective in addressing conflict and where they have not, and offers observations on some of the outstanding issues concerning regional approaches to conflict management.

Also identifies potential research and development opportunities to introduce innovative and sustainable waste management technologies. Study methodology included literature reviews, on-line database consultation, interviews with Transport Canada personnel and private sector transportation officials, and consultation with vendors and developers of waste management technologies. Issues examined include the extent of waste management programs in place in North American transportation facilities; contamination of soils and groundwater; disposal of used tires; used petroleum products and solvents; waste pavement and concrete; and waste plastics. Waste management technologies suggested for future research and development include thermal desorption, in-vessel composting, and portable grinders for use in re-

Discusses market opportunities for intelligent transport systems (ITS) designed to meet the needs of travellers who are elderly or disabled. The report presents demographics and travel patterns of the target market and provides a distribution of the number of travellers by mode (personal vehicle, conventional local transit, special transit, taxi, rail, and intercity bus). It describes the technologies being applied to each of these modes and presents an overview of the functional requirements of seniors and people with disabilities for each mode. Based on an analysis of the technologies available and the functional requirements of users, selected opportunities are characterised with respect to user abilities, number of users, and specific benefits which would be provided. The focus is on those applications which would increase the mobility and choice of the target market, and would provide a significant market for ITS developers and manufacturers. A market description and a general path to market assessment are included.

This report is an initial step towards assessing the cost of firearm injuries in Canada. It includes a review of the literature on the medical costs of firearm injuries in the United States. The study sought to determine the direct medical costs related to firearm injuries in Alberta for a one year period. Costs are confined to measurable, direct medical costs taken primarily from hospital records and other databases for the following sectors of the Alberta health care system: ambulance transport, emergency department services, acute hospitalisation services, in-hospital rehabilitation, and long-term care. The report also analyses the number and costs of firearm injury related cases by the intent of injury and type of firearm involved. The final chapter assesses the availability of similar data to estimate the medical costs of firearm injuries in other Canadian provinces.

Modèle d'agent dans un système multi-agent, modèle d'agent réagissant à la situation MARS : rapport final

Par Bernard Moulin. Valcartier, PQ : Centre de recherche de la défense, Valcartier, 1995. 70 p. : Ill.
MICROLOG 97-00471 (1 fiche)

Ce document décrit un modèle d'agent appelé MARS. Pour un tel agent, chacune des activités qu'il doit entreprendre est représentée par un but. L'évolution des buts (par changements d'états) au sein d'un agenda permet d'expliquer le mécanisme d'inférence de l'agent. Ceci a pour avantage d'indiquer clairement les activités que l'agent a l'intention de mettre en oeuvre. De plus, une structure explicite de buts permettrait d'intégrer dans ce modèle des protocoles multi-agents, tels que la coopération/négociation sur les buts ou la répartition/délégation de tâches. Ce formalisme de représentation a été retenu parce qu'il permet une modélisation des connaissances à partir d'une décomposition fonctionnelle du domaine applicatif. Les buts de MARS décrivent des activités que l'on désire voir l'agent accomplir.

Trois types de bus ont été retenus : les buts à accomplir, les buts à atteindre et les buts à choisir.

Describes the development of a simple mathematical model that can be used to predict the thermal response of a tank containing a pressure liquefied gas (PLG) exposed to fire impingement. The model, developed as part of an overall research program studying boiling liquid expanding vapour explosions and other ruptures of PLG tanks, is intended to help analyse experimental data obtained from fire tests of propane tanks. It is also hoped that the model would be useful for emergency responders to help them make rapid assessments of an emergency situation involving a PLG tank exposed to fire. For example, it may be possible with the model to use remote observations of pressure relief valve first opening time and time between valve cycles to assess the severity of the fire exposure. This report summarises the methods used and the results obtained.

In particular, the paper examines the pressure that globalisation (referring to the increasing levels of economic interdependence and integration) may bring to bear on labour market adjustment, and how labour rights are addressed in the North American Agreement on Labour Co-operation between the United States, Canada, and Mexico. The paper then considers whether there is a need to address labour and trade issues in a broader international context, and how a multilateral dialogue or negotiation might begin to approach the issue.

North American Free Trade, subsidies and countervailing duties : issues and options

By Gilbert Gagné. Ottawa : Dept. of Foreign Affairs & International Trade, 1994. 34 p. : Bibl. (Policy staff paper / Canada. Dept. of Foreign Affairs & International Trade ; SP47A) (Trade policy series / Canada. Dept. of Foreign Affairs & International Trade ; 94/13). MICROLOG 97-00444 (1 fiche)

Begins with a review of the basic facts of the exchange of goods and services between the United States and Canada, then reviews the Canada-US Free Trade Agreement of 1987, including its subsidy provisions. The panel mechanism of the Agreement and its role in reviewing trade disputes is evaluated. The paper then discusses the Canadian proposals at the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade multilateral negotiations and in the Canada-US Working Group regarding subsidies and countervailing duties; the provisions of the North American Free Trade Agreement of 1992 and the Seattle Declaration of 1993 with regard to binational panels and trade remedy issues; and results of the multilateral trade negotiations, focusing on the Agreement on Subsidies and Countervailing Measures. The paper concludes with a discussion of necessary improvements to the NAFTA provisions on subsidies and trade remedies.

Nunavut Implementation Commission. Yellowknife : The Commission, 1996. 78 p.
ISBN 1-896548-04-0
MICROLOG 97-00292 (1 fiche)

The Nunavut Implementation Commission contemplates the establishment of a single telecommunications infrastructure of benefit and use to both public and private sectors. This report examines the telecommunications infrastructure and service needs of Nunavut and explains the benefits of a blended and shared use of common telecommunications infrastructure facilities. It begins by reviewing the policy and regulatory environment in which such an infrastructure will operate and introduces the concept of community teleservice centres, or multi-purpose centres that would provide telecommunications and computer facilities and support in rural and remote areas. The use of this concept in other jurisdictions is reviewed along with their applicability to Nunavut. The report then describes the technology that could be used in the Nunavut telecommunications infrastructure and its potential applications in such areas as health care, justice, distance learning, and public administration. The report ends with sections discussing community needs, infrastructure and services requirements and costs, and recommendations on approaches to providing the infrastructure.

Describes a study in which 16 male subjects participated in an experiment requiring sustained cognitive work during a three-day period. One of the cognitive tasks required mental addition of rapidly presented numbers. On each trial, subjects reported the sum and then provided a subjective confidence rating to indicate the degree of certainty in their response. The experimental results not only show the relation between task performance and degree of sleep deprivation, but also the effect of sleep deprivation on the correlation between confidence and performance (calibration), the ability to differentiate correct from incorrect judgements (resolution), and the validity of subjective certainty.

Focuses on the role of school boards in the provision of adult education and training programs. Briefly discusses the curriculum and delivery of education as it pertains specifically to the education/economy link. Poses four questions: how school boards can assist the prosperity of the individuals and communities that they serve; the role of school boards in a lifelong learning continuum; the extent of current school board provision of education and training opportunities for adults; and how school boards can enhance their education and training curriculum contribution. Includes a macro analysis of the types of partnership between school boards, community and government agencies, and the private sector boards that have developed to support the economic recovery of one Ontario community region, the Niagara peninsula.

Optimal patent term and trade : some considerations on the road ahead

By I. Prakash Sharma. Ottawa : External Affairs & International Trade Canada, 1993. 72 p. : ill., Bibl. (Policy staff paper / Canada. Dept. of Foreign Affairs & International Trade ; SP30A) (Trade policy series / Canada. Dept. of Foreign Affairs & International Trade ; 93/12)

The choice of an appropriate patent term can affect positively the well-being of Canadians by stimulating research and development, investment, and jobs in high value added industries. There has been a growing international consensus in support of a 20-year patent term and there are even suggestions that a longer term might be needed to amortise development costs. This paper discusses relevant considerations regarding the optimal patent term, and whether some industries require a longer term than is now provided. It summarises the conclusions of economic theory on the determination of the optimal patent term, contrasts this theory against recent experience in the pharmaceutical industry, and addresses issues of patent policy, besides the patent term, that are likely to be important in Canadian international trade. These issues include the scope of patent protection.

As part of Canadian Coast Guard's introduction of predictive maintenance techniques in its effort to reduce vessel operating costs and to improve the reliability of shipboard machinery, the Transportation Development Centre defined a requirement to develop and demonstrate a machinery performance analysis system. This report describes the implementation of a prototype machinery performance analysis system called PASS (Performance Analysis Software System) aboard a light icebreaker/tender. Equipment monitoring functions provided by PASS included automated tracking of accumulated running hours and number of starts for the main propulsion plant and other selected equipment; automated detection of equipment sensor out-of-limit occurrences; automated recording of pre- and post-event data; steady state performance monitoring of selected equipment; and trending of diesel engine data. The report assesses the utility of the PASS data for improving the maintenance planning process, using actual data gathered during the sea trials of the system.

Sedimentary phosphate deposits occur in 14 stratigraphic units in British Columbia in rocks ranging in age from Cambrian to Lower Jurassic. This study begins with an introduction on the phosphate deposits of the North American cordillera. It then reviews the stratigraphy of the sedimentary phosphate deposits in British Columbia and discusses in detail the petrographic and chemical makeup of these phosphate deposits, especially how they relate to phosphate beneficiation. A comprehensive classification of the deposits, based on chemical and mineralogical parameters, is proposed. The trace element content of these deposits is also described, since some of these elements (such as uranium, fluorine, and rare earths) may be recoverable. Details are included on specific phosphate localities, on the beneficiation and processing of British Columbia phosphate rock, and on the resource potential of the deposits identified.

Examines the rates of dissolution in simulated lung fluid of uranium dusts associated with yellowcake processing mills at Rabbit Lake and Key Lake, Saskatchewan. A parallel study was conducted on samples of ore dust associated with drilling operations at Cluff Lake, Saskatchewan. Each dust sample was resuspended in the laboratory and sampled using a cascade impactor. Aerosols were collected on glass fibre filters and 16 samples were used for the solubility extraction studies. The investigators subjected the samples to parallel extractions by simulated lung fluid under continuous flow over a 66-day period. Results presented include fraction of uranium dissolved over time, and effect of particle size on dissolution rates. For ore dust samples, dissolution rates for radium-226 and lead-210 are also given.

Studies on accidental immersion are sufficient to begin the construction and calibration of a predictive model for estimating the survival time for a human immersed in cold water. The model, whose development is described in this report, is based on the cylindrical core-shell concept of heat conduction with internal heat production augmented by shivering. Variables include ambient temperature, clothing protection with and without leakage, subject characteristics, sea state, and level of immersion. Survival time is defined by the deep core temperature reaching 30 degrees C. Example predicted survival times are presented for individuals with varying levels of immersion, body condition, and clothing protection.

A Preliminary assessment of potential alternative uses for lightstations in B.C.

Cornerstone Planning Group. Victoria : Ministry of Employment & Investment, 1996. 50 p.
ISBN 0-7726-2983-8
MICROLOG 97-00161 (1 fiche)

Describes a preliminary review of the possible alternative uses for the 35 lightstations on British Columbia coasts which are due to be staffed by the federal government. The rationale for the review is that the presence of multiple compatible uses at the lightstation sites provides a reason for maintaining a staffed presence which can enable provision of basic services (site maintenance and operation) and, in turn, generate spin-off benefits that come with lightstation duties. Such benefits would include search and rescue support, communications assistance, weather reporting, and scientific data collection. The review report describes alternative lightstation uses elsewhere, mainly in the United States. It then evaluates the British Columbia lightstation sites according to such criteria as location and natural attributes, on-site facilities and services, access, and potential alternative uses such as tourism, recreation, research, and business. Finally, the report provides initial guidance on marketing those lightstations that have alternative use potential.

Reviews the case in favour of replacing the Atomic Energy of Canada NRU (National Research Universal) reactor with an irradiation research facility (IRF), based on the economic and technical benefits that Canada would continue to receive. Describes the proposed IRF and the experimental facilities included in the reference IRF concept, and reviews the agency's pre-project program to further develop the IRF concept to the point that any uncertainties related to feasibility and licensability are minimised prior to project implementation. This program includes activities in the areas of physical and thermalhydraulic modelling, licensing, development of containment requirements, facility design, and studies of options to reduce project costs.

L'identification de l'ADN à des fins médico-légales, qui tente de déterminer si des prélèvements biologiques effectués sur des suspects correspondent à des prélèvements biologiques laissés sur les lieux d'un crime, est récemment devenue un important moyen d'enquête pour les corps policiers. Le projet de Loi C-104 règle un problème en établissant un cadre législatif qui permettra aux policiers d'obtenir des mandats en vue de prélever des substances corporelles à des fins d'établissement des empreintes génétiques. Ce document porte précisément sur le projet de Loi C-104.

The purple pitcher plant, Sarracenia purpurea, is of interest due to its carnivorous habit and unusual appearance. The wild plant is becoming scarce due to over-harvesting and habitat destruction. The development of a practical and efficient method of propagation would make it available to nurseries, provide an opportunity for the greenhouse industry, reduce the impact on native stands, and better protect the species. This report reviews the basic characteristics of the pitcher plant, its seedling propagation, and vegetative propagation. It includes recommendations for propagation under Saskatchewan conditions.

The stemless lady's-slipper orchid, Cypripedium acaule, is valued for its flowers and its medicinal properties. Some species of Cypripedium are endangered and a practical, efficient means of propagation needs to be developed so that these plants can be cultivated. In addition, the species has potential for the nursery industry. This paper describes the growing conditions, seedling propagation, and vegetative propagation of various Cypripedium species.

This report begins with an overview of the Prairie Swine Centre, a non-profit Saskatchewan corporation that operates Canada's largest swine production research facility. The overview covers the Centre's research program objectives, technology transfer, educational activities, funding, relationships with universities and other institutions, and its future vision. The report then reviews the research completed during the Centre's first contract with the Saskatchewan Agriculture Development Fund. Project objectives, experimental procedures, results, and implications are discussed for studies on such topics as feed intake, energy intake, feeding, nutritional requirements, food supplements, diet formulation, swine care and management, and hog barn optimisation.

Les concentrations de mercure dans l'eau du Saint-Laurent sont actuellement peu connues. Seulement quelques données sont disponibles depuis 1985, et uniquement pour le Lac Saint-Louis. Le mercure est un contaminant très toxique et les teneurs en mercure dans certains poissons du fleuve sont encore problématiques pour la consommation. Il est donc important de connaître la source et la dynamique du mercure dans le fleuve. Les techniques d'analyse utilisées antérieurement dans les réseaux de suivi du Ministère n'étaient pas assez sensibles pour mesurer les concentrations de mercure dans l'eau. Il a donc fallu développer une nouvelle technique analytique permettant l'analyse du mercure à l'état de traces.

Northwest Territories. Financial Management Board. Yellowknife : The Board, 1995. 89 p.
MICROLOG 97-00290 (1 fiche)

In March 1995, the Northwest Territories Minister of Finance made a commitment to consult with the public on how to balance the 1996-97 territorial budget. The first part of this report explains the purpose and objectives of the public consultation and briefly describes the consultation process. The second part describes the size of the public response, and the third summarises the responses provided to the questions posed. These questions included whether deficit reduction should focus on spending cuts or tax increases; what expenditures should be cut back, and where; options to raise additional taxes; and which government services should be paid for directly or cost-shared. The final section attempts to draw some conclusions from the broad range of material received. Appendices provide additional detail on both the consultation process and the responses received.

The R-2000 monitoring program and subsequent analysis was carried out to check or re-define HOT-2000 program default values and to evaluate the performance of R-2000 houses and their sub-systems with respect to new conventional housing. The investigators collected hourly data with computer-based data logging systems at seven R-2000 houses in Edmonton, Toronto, and Montreal. This report presents the monitoring results, based on field measurements (or estimates in cases where data were missing). The data were analysed to determine energy and comfort performance of the houses, and the results should be taken as an indication of the performance to be expected of R-2000 houses. The report includes a general summary comparing the performance of all the houses, and individual house performance summaries in an appendix.

This paper develops analytical solutions for transient and steady-state diffusive mass transfer rates from a pinhole in a radioactive waste container for constant concentration and inventory-limited source conditions. Mass transfer in three media is considered: inside the pinhole, outside the container, and inside the container. Simple equations are formulated for radionuclide mass transfer rates from a pinhole. The factors that must be considered when providing a conservative estimate of mass transfer rates are noted.

Presents a cohort study of the mortality experience (1950-90) of 1,744 underground miners and 321 millers or surface workers at Newfoundland fluorspar mines. Degree of excess mortality was noted among underground miners for cancers of the lung, buccal cavity, pharynx and mouth, and urinary tract, and for silicosis and pneumoconiosis. Statistical relationships were developed between radon daughter exposure and risk of dying of lung cancer. Exposure-response data for lung cancer were fitted to various mathematical models. The model selected included terms for attained age, cumulative dose, dose rate, and time since last exposure. Joint effects of radon and smoking could not be adequately assessed using this cohort.

A Rational basis for accounting for the impact of concentration fluctuations on toxicological assessment and estimation of injury resulting from the release of chemical and biological warfare agents

By Eugene C. Yee, Ralston, AB : National Defence, Defence Research Establishment Suffield, 1996. vii, 40 p. : ill., Bibl. (Suffield report / Defence Research Establishment Suffield; no. 634)

MICROLOG 97-00490 (1 fiche)

This paper develops a rational, consistent, and simple methodology for estimating the degree of injury or damage to exposed military personnel around a chemical or biological warfare agent release. The proposed hazard analysis methodology places particular emphasis on the following important factors: the usually highly non-linear toxicity of rapidly acting toxic materials; the recognition that realistic estimates for toxicological assessment must explicitly account for the fluctuating concentration in a dispersing plume; the relevance of the time scale for the application; and the variability in the exposed population to a specific toxic load. Accordingly, the methodology incorporates use of a non-linear toxic load, a simple model for incorporation of fluctuating concentration loads into the mean non-linear toxic load, and the use of probit relationships to model the varying susceptibility of individuals. Example calculations performed using the proposed methodology are presented.

Recent developments in biodosimetry

By A. Trivedi and C.L. Greenstock. Ottawa : Atomic Energy Control Board, 1995. vii, 87 p. : Bibl. (Report / Canada. Atomic Energy Control Board; INFO-0579)

MICROLOG 97-00035 (1 fiche)

Biodosimetry has the potential to play an important role in assessing unanticipated or occupational radiation exposures, and in determining lifetime accumulated doses. More commonly, biodosimetry could be used for routine monitoring, for regulatory purposes, or for epidemiological studies of long-term effects of radiation exposure. This report reviews recent (1989-93) developments in biodosimetry and presents a comparative study of the existing techniques and their future prospects. It summarizes the sensitivity, reproducibility, limiting dose, dose-rate and energy responses, linear energy transfer responses, sources of variability and uncertainty, and other practical aspects of each bioindicator. The strengths and weaknesses of each approach are evaluated on the basis of a set of common criteria for particular applications. Most of the biotechniques are applicable to detection of relatively high radiation exposures for relatively short times after exposure.

Ce document donne une explication de la façon dont le droit d'auteur fonctionne. L'émergence de nouvelles technologies de communication, en particulier, rend le domaine du droit d'auteur de plus en plus complexe et difficile à comprendre; il n'est donc que logique de faire un survol des principales caractéristiques du droit d'auteur. Un résumé des modifications les plus importantes auxquelles ont donné lieu le projet de loi C-60 et les textes législatifs suivants servira ensuite à remettre en contexte les révisions qui s'annoncent. Enfin, nous analysons certains aspects de la réforme du droit d'auteur, en nous attachant tout d'abord à la création des droits voisins, qui pourraient se révéler l'une des questions les plus litigieuses du programme législatif, puis en nous attachant à la possibilité de modifier l'exemption pour utilisation équitable ainsi que les exemptions prévues pour le secteur de l'éducation.

MICROLOG 97-00033 (2 fiche)

Provides an overview of first line supervisory activities at Ontario Hydro nuclear generating stations (Pickering A and Bruce B) and the Point Lepreau generation station in New Brunswick. Activity profiles describing the range of first line supervisory roles and responsibilities for nuclear operators are developed from survey data and flow charting methods. These profiles are then compared with formal job responsibilities identified in job descriptions, supervisory training provided, and assessment criteria used to evaluate supervisors. Finally, the report relates the findings of supervisory practices in the group under study with the findings in current literature relating to supervisory functioning.

The Unconditional Grant in New Brunswick has traditionally played a very important role in municipal finances and is a prominent aspect of the Provincial/Municipal fiscal arrangements. First introduced in 1967 with the adoption of the recommendations of the Royal Commission on Finance and Municipal Taxation, more commonly referred to as the Byrne Commission, the Unconditional Grant was an important element of the sweeping reform of this era and continues to be an important element of municipal finance today. In October 1995, Government announced a review of the Unconditional Grant Formula with the objective of putting in place a new formula for the 1997 municipal fiscal year. This document presents the results of the review.

By Jean M. Read. Toronto : Pay Equity Review, 1996. iii, 88 p. : ill., Bibl.
MICROLOG 97-00150 (2 fiche)

Presents findings of a review of the Ontario Pay Equity Act, as required under Section 37(1) of the Act. The objectives of the review included: providing advice on future directions to continue pay equity; making recommendations aimed at maximising the gains realised under the Act; and developing an administrative framework that is cost-effective and appropriate to the future. This report on the review examines the Act from various perspectives: its history and how it developed over the years; how it compares to similar legislation in other jurisdictions; and some of its economic effects. The report also highlights major findings of the consultation portion of the review, in which meetings were held with over 150 individuals and groups representing such interests as employers, unions, employees, academics, and advocacy groups. Issues considered in the review include the experience of pay equity, ongoing pay equity requirements and responsibilities, and pay equity administration and adjudication.

This study was undertaken to familiarise designers and builders with an air barrier system for building walls that makes it possible to effectively respect the various requirements of the National Building Code of Canada 1990. The system described and illustrated in this report consists of rigid panels applied to the walls, with airtight joints. Sections of the report describe the air barrier materials and sealants used, and detail the air barrier performance requirements, materials, installation methods, and resulting structural resistance of the air barrier to wind loads, as shown in four case studies. These studies involve application of the air barrier system to a new and a renovated concrete building, a new steel building, and a new wood building. A final chapter describes the verification of in-situ air barrier performance in a new steel building and a renovated concrete building.

Effective scheduling of multiple applications of nitrogen fertilizer is critical to maximising yields and fertilizer use efficiency in potatoes. This study evaluated a new system for monitoring the potato plant's nutrient status, specifically by testing the levels of nutrients in leaf sap. The study included field trials in which sap nitrate concentrations of several commercially important potato cultivars were monitored in response to a gradient of available soil nitrogen. Based on trial data, recommendations for sap nitrate levels for three locally important Saskatchewan potato varieties were developed. The study also made recommendations for which tissues to sample, how the samples should be handled, and what time of day to test.

Selection of a high strength riding chain for buoys

By A.S. Dinovitzer and B. Menon. Montreal : Transport Canada, Policy & Coordination, Transportation Development Centre, 1995. xl, 72 p. : Ill., Bibl. At head of title: Fleet Technology Limited. MICROLOG 97-00204 (1 fiche)

One goal of the Coast Guard Marine Aids Division is to obtain at least five years of unattended service for year-round navigation buoy mooring chains. Previous studies focusing on 2.9 metre buoys concluded that the thrash portion of such chains, being subject to the highest rate of wear, should have a nominal diameter of 3.8 centimetres. Because of the heavy weight of a mooring comprised totally of such chain, and because a certain minimum freeboard must be maintained for the buoy hull, suitable lighter weight riding chains were required. The objective of the reported study was to establish the diameter and strength of a riding chain that could be used, in conjunction with the recommended thrash chain, to moor 2.9-metre bell buoys in water depths of 30-150 metres and that would attain a safe, unattended five-year service life. The report describes the approaches taken to determine the dynamic load, chain wear, and residual strength of typical buoy moorings, and documents how these data were used to develop recommendations for riding chain diameter and strength for various water depths. Describes an in-service evaluation program for lighter-weight de-icing and snow removal equipment for use on roads. The evaluation follows the design, development, and manufacture of a salt and/or abrasive spreader and a one-way snow plow with a wing built of composite materials. The evaluation covers the use of this equipment installed on a pilot truck that was employed to de-ice and remove snow from part of a highway network in a region of Quebec during the winter of 1994-95. Users were consulted throughout the evaluation for their opinions on the operation, maintenance, and handling of the equipment. The evaluation enabled validation of the concepts used and formation of proposals for alterations and adjustments, and suggested that monitoring of this equipment be continued. The evaluation also helped identify the weight reductions obtained by using composite materials, compared to conventional steel equipment.

Smoke and mirrors, the Canadian tobacco war

MICROLOG 97-00344 (4 fiche) (Available on fiche only)

This book provides an insider view of the Canadian tobacco war, a century-old conflict that began to escalate in the 1980s. It explains how Canada emerged as a global leader in the public health crusade to regulate the powerful tobacco industry and details the bitter campaigns to maintain high tobacco taxes, ban tobacco advertising, eliminate tobacco company sponsorships, require plain packaging of tobacco products, mandate clear health warnings about tobacco, and prohibit smoking in public places and workplaces. It reviews the Canadian tobacco industry, the strategies used by the tobacco companies and their opponents, the efforts by the tobacco industry to penetrate markets in the third world and in former Communist countries, and the adverse economic, social, and health effects of tobacco growing and use. The book concludes with recommendations for actions to control tobacco use and improve public health.

Le 27 novembre 1995, le premier ministre Jean Chrétien a annoncé que son gouvernement déposerait à la Chambre des communes une motion qui, si elle était adoptée, exprimerait la reconnaissance, par la Chambre, du fait que le Québec forme une société distincte au sein du Canada. Cette proposition s'inscrit dans un ensemble de mesures destinées à remplir certains engagements pris par le premier ministre durant la dernière phase de la campagne référendaire au Québec. Ce document se penche précisément sur l'origine, les interprétations et les implications de la société distincte.

Dept. of Foreign Affairs & International Trade ; SP33A) (Trade policy series / Canada. Dept. of Foreign Affairs & International Trade ; 93/15) MICROLOG 97-00451 (1 fiche)

This paper explores the critical interface between international environmental agreements (IEAs) and their trade counterparts, recognising that there is increasing pressure to incorporate trade measures into more IEAs as a primary means of making environmental commitments operational and to provide discipline on signatories and non-signatories alike. The paper reviews the obligations of several key IEAs and finds that they are characterised by a considerable degree of ambiguity and/or potential loopholes. The paper continues by exploring the scope of the mechanisms incorporated into IEAs for resolving disputes and suggests that the dispute settlement provisions in IEAs remain very underdeveloped compared to the counterpart provisions found in trade agreements. Special attention is given to sanctions as a central part of an effective dispute settlement system, identifying several preconditions that should be met when developing a credible sanctions mechanism. CA CO EV EX ND SS

Stand density management diagrams for lodgepole pine, white spruce and interior Douglas-fir

Density manipulation is one of the most powerful tools available to silviculturists to achieve a broad range of silvicultural objectives. One of the most effective methods of planning density management in even-aged stands is through the use of stand density management diagrams. These diagrams graphically depict the temporal relationships between stand density, top height, quadratic mean diameter, and mean tree volume. They allow users to develop and project crop plans through time, to determine the optimum timing of thinning and their operational feasibility, and to contrast potential outcomes from a number of stand management regimes. The stand density management diagrams for lodgepole pine, Douglas fir, and white spruce in this report were derived from managed stand yield tables produced by TASS, an individual tree, distance-dependent growth model. The report describes the use of these diagrams in planning thinning regimes and making preliminary yield estimations. CA FO ND SC

It discusses a number of debt reduction and debt service mechanisms introduced by the international community, including the Baker Plan, the Brady Plan, and the World Bank Debt Reduction Facility; government-to-government debt; and multilateral debt. A regional breakdown of debtors is used to show the wide variations in debt management experiences of developing countries. The work described in this report was performed under the multinational collaborative Communications Systems Network Interoperability (CSNI) research and development project. The project's main objective is to develop, test, and demonstrate multiservice communications across mixed media transmission networks employing open systems principles and commercially available products to the greatest extent possible. The report describes a computer simulation model of the CSNI network topology, developed to assess the effectiveness of quality of service (QoS) driven routing in heterogeneous radio subnetworks. The simulated topology contains 11 routers, 33 subnetwork access controllers, and as many end systems forming a single intermediate system to intermediate system routing domain of 13 subnets. The study investigates how to set the ISO 10589 protocol timers and QoS measurement period to best control the rate of link state advertisements within the network and to minimise the routing data overhead over the links. Simulation results indicate the limitations imposed by the protocol.

During the 1960s, the Suffield (Alberta) test site hosted a series of international trials based on the detonations of high explosive charges, including trials using 20 to 500 tons of TNT. While primarily designed for military purposes, the trials produced craters strikingly similar to features on the surface of the earth and moon. These results were of considerable interest to the wider scientific community. This report compiles results from the high explosive trials, much of which was previously unpublished, published with limited distribution, or widely scattered in open scientific publications and books. Details are provided on the various craters excavated by the larger explosions, including excavated sections, stratigraphy, structural deformations, and circumferential structures. Also included is a discussion of structural analogues of the craters in impact structures.

It identifies typical and optimum loading conditions for four selected carriers (deadweight 7,800 to 10,560 tonnes), estimates the oil loss potential based on a probabilistic prediction of the extent of damage, identifies a recommended fit of self-help systems to be installed along with estimates of installation and operating/maintenance costs, and includes a model abridged contingency plan which addresses only those aspects related to the recommended self-help systems.

The purpose of this paper is to examine the issue of Canadian firms' access to membership in foreign-based technology consortia. The scope of the paper is limited to those consortia engaged in pre-competitive research and which receive government support. The first section defines various terms related to consortia and the types of consortia encountered, and summarises the relative merits of technology consortia. The second section provides a brief overview of policy trends in the United States, the European Community, and Japan (the Triad) which underlie the phenomenon of international technology consortia. The goal of this section is to highlight some positions taken by various stakeholders in Canada and the Triad with a view to understanding how the rules of participation may be affected by competing interests. The final section compiles documentary and anecdotal evidence concerning consortia membership, along with some case histories of consortia participation.

Telecommunications and universal service, international experience in the context of South African policy reform

This publication is intended to suggest some approaches to the delivery of universal telecommunication service, with reference to the challenges facing South Africa in providing universal service delivery that combines the needs of a highly sophisticated urban business sector with the needs of a vast, underserved population in urban townships and rural areas. It first outlines some central concepts pertaining to universal service, then discusses the issue of state monopoly versus private competition in providing that service. It describes the dangers for universal service posed by market liberalisation in its hypothetical pure form, and highlights the important influence of non-structural factors on achievement of universal service. Chapter three describes the instruments, measures, and requirements for the pursuit of universal service, attempting to draw out key structural relationships, limitations of each, and their relation to different industry structures. Chapter four discusses demands of a proposed Universal Service Agency and the final chapter provides more detailed descriptions of telecommunication industry structures, regulatory regimes, and universal service instruments and actions on a country by country basis.

This atlas divides the Gulf of St. Lawrence into 21 sub-areas based primarily on the topography. For each area, the monthly means, standard deviations, and extremes of temperature, salinity, and density are calculated and the results are presented as tables, time series plots at selected depths, and contoured plots. Optimal estimation was used to calculate the temperature, salinity, and density distributions at zero, 30, 50, 100, 150 metres and near bottom for the 15th of February, May, August, and November corresponding to the winter, spring, summer, and fall. In addition, the atlas presents seasonal volumetric temperature and salinity distri-

Temporal and spatial scales of temperature and salinity on the Scotian Shelf

MICROLOG 97-00276 (1 fiche)

Presents determinations of the correlations for temperature and salinity time series from five instrumented arrays located on the Scotian Shelf. Both temporal autocorrelations, a series correlated with itself but with a time lag, and spatial correlations, separated by distance but not in time, are calculated. For the latter, the investigators computed correlations for time series from instruments on the same mooring but at different depths, and for time series at the same depths but separated horizontally. For some of the arrays, the horizontally separated correlations had a directional dependence. The correlations were used to obtain the best fit of a modified exponential function used in optimal estimations. For each array, the investigators derived a temporal, vertical, and two (usually) horizontal scales. Scales generally had a wide range.

MICROLOG 97-00141 (3 fiche)

Presents results of a drift prospecting program conducted on northern Vancouver Island in an area south and west of Port Hardy. The three-year till geochemistry project discussed is one of several provincial till geochemistry surveys to demonstrate the utility of integrating surficial geological mapping and exploration geochemical methods to locate buried mineral deposits in areas of drift-covered terrain. The study consisted of a systematic sampling program of primary basal till and colluvial till deposits which were first identified and then targeted during surficial mapping. Pebble lithology studies were conducted at each of the till sample stations. The bulk of the report consists of tables, graphs, and element concentration maps. An introductory section reviews the study area's surficial geology, describes the survey methodology, and interprets data related to some of the more important elements associated with mineral deposits, such as lead, copper, gold, silver, zinc, and iron.

Tree Farm Licence (TFL) 19 covers 192,551 hectares on the west coast of Vancouver Island, of which 153,655 hectares are available for timber harvesting. After a brief description of the TFL area, this report reviews the principles for determining the allowable annual cut for the area and presents an accounting of the factors and the rationale used in making that determination. These factors include the role of the base-case timber supply forecast, the existing forest inventory, the expected rate of forest growth, the land base contributing to timber harvesting, regeneration delay, areas not satisfactorily restocked, incremental silviculture, decay and wastage, integrated resource management objectives, the Vancouver Island Land Use Plan, and forest industry facilities and requirements. ### Uncertainties in gas dispersion at the Bruce Heavy Water Plant

By E. Alp and A. Ciccone. Ottawa : Atomic Energy Control Board, 1995. vii, 73 p. : Ill., Bibl. (Report / Canada. Atomic Energy Control Board ; INFO-0575)
MICROLOG 97-00036 (1 fiche)

Concerns regarding the uncertainties in atmospheric dispersion of gases released from the Bruce Heavy Water Plant arise due to the toxic nature of these gases, hydrogen sulphide and its combustion product sulphur dioxide. This study examines the factors that contribute to the uncertainties, including the effect of the shoreline setting of the plant, the nature of heavy gas releases and dispersion, concentration fluctuations in the atmosphere, and the effects of topography. The basic physics of each of these issues is described along with fundamental modelling principles. Recommendations are provided regarding available computer models that would be suitable for modelling gas dispersion in the vicinity of the plant.

Several recent papers have presented evidence from foreign exchange and other markets suggesting that the log of excess returns can be characterized as first-order integrated processes. This paper considers whether those results can be explained away as an artefact of the estimation procedure used, and suggests that the evidence presented for unit roots may be spurious. The explanation relies on the presence of several factors, including severe size distortion in more than one statistical test and sensitivity to the design of the simulation experiments used to validate those tests. The paper attempts to replicate previously published results based on tests for the number of co-integrating vectors in a system of variables and applies a series of simulation experiments to assess their robustness. It also does the same for tests of parameter restrictions on the co-integrating vector.

This project was initiated to study the means through which electrophysiological measurements of brain function could be combined with behavioural measurements for the purpose of understanding the nature of information processing required in air traffic control (ATC) environments. The work included analysis of the perceptual and cognitive characteristics of the ATC training and operating environments. As a result of this analysis, a design for a multitasking environment was finalised after several iterations in which it was tested on experts and on students in a standard ATC training program. Error and accuracy measurements were made for each of the four tasks separately, and algorithms were developed to take into account different variables in each of the tasks and to produce a final score that combined performance in all tasks. Electroencephalographic measurements were made during one of the tasks that simulated an actual task done by controllers in their normal environment. Analysis using the algorithms revealed the performance differences between expert controllers, ATC instructors, and students.

Vision and work at sea, the relationships between visual acuity and colour vision and performance on deck, engineering and logistics tasks of the Canadian Coast Guard

Human Factors North Inc. Montreal : Transport Canada, Policy & Coordination, Transportation Development Centre, 1994. viii, 81 p. : Ill., Maps, Bibl.
MICROLOG 97-00337 (1 fiche)

Coast Guard seagoing employees must have the visual ability necessary to carry out shipboard tasks safely and efficiently. The Canadian Coast Guard needs to establish and to justify visual performance standards for seagoing work, but standard visual tests have, as of yet, no proven relation to Coast Guard work. To address this deficiency, a research project was undertaken to measure the relationship between Coast Guard work and visual ability. This report describes that project, which developed a series of work-related visual performance tasks which closely imitated the vision requirements of actual Coast Guard work. These tasks, along with conventional visual acuity and colour vision tests, were administered to Coast Guard personnel and to civilian monocular and binocular observers. The tasks were developed through field observation on Coast Guard ships of work done by personnel in three departments: deck, engineering, and logistics. Tasks simulated included buoy observation; reading of signs, gauges, and other engineering-related objects; and reading of charts, lists, and computer screens. Performance on the tasks was plotted as a function of performance on the standard visual acuity and colour vision tests. The results provide an empirical basis for establishing vision test standards for Coast Guard seagoing work.

Summarises and compares the volumes of wastes that would be generated for disposal in the cases of the direct disposal of CANDU used fuel and the disposal of reprocessing wastes if the fuel were recycled. Modifications to the procedures in the reference cases are discussed, based on known or feasible technology, with the objective of reducing the volumes of waste. The estimates of waste volumes that would result from reprocessing are compared with information on waste arising in the United States, Britain, and France, together with a multi-program estimate derived by the International Atomic Energy Agency. The volumes are adjusted for the differences in burnup in the different programs and for the different levels of fission product loading in the high-level waste class.

Ginseng is a perennial crop that requires at least four years to reach marketable quality, but it is susceptible to injury at soil temperatures below -4 degrees C. This report uses long-term climate data to assess the risk of low temperature injury to ginseng growing in Saskatchewan. It first describes winter soil temperatures in Saskatchewan using maps of low temperature probabilities, including average soil temperatures and the probabilities of cold spells of varying intensities and durations. Subsequently, the risks of soil temperatures falling below selected critical values are determined. A simple heat-flow model is used to simulate the effects of snow cover and soil mulches on soil temperature.
